Is Reid Looking for a Buyer?

Is the Reid Centre site for sale or isn't it?

The $13 million question was puzzling city hall officials, aldermen, realtors and others today following the circulation of a real estate firm's 40-page report dealing with the proposed Wharf Street development and its investment potential.

One news report this morning said the controversial project of Vancouver developer J. A. Reid appears to be up for sale before the first footings have been laid or the first bucket of cement poured.

But from several sides today, including well-informed realtors, the Times was told that the situation is by no means clear and there is no solid basis for assuming any selling intentions on Reid's part.

From Reid's Vancouver office the only comment of any sort offered in clarification was a categorical denial of the newspaper report by a woman clerical assistant, who said she had been besieged by calls all morning.

"As far as this office is concerned it's just not true," she said, adding that Reid himself is away until next week.

From a series of interviews this reporter found no one in Victoria prepared to make a firm interpretation of the National Trust Company brochure which bears the title of Victoria realtor John A. Relling and is dated September, 1972.

But these are some of the guesses as to Reid's motive in commissioning the report by a Vancouver firm of consulting economists and engineers:

1. Reid may have every intention of proceeding with the massive, hotel-residential complex, for which he was awarded a land-use contract by city council last June. But he wants to arrange sale of the property in advance.

2. His original source of financing may have fallen through and he is now looking for syndicate financing.

3. Reid has been unable to find any financing for the scheme because his original, higher-density proposal created so much furore that he agreed to scale it down — and the final compromtise may be considered economically unfeasible by the mortgage lenders.

As a result he "want's out."

But one prominent realtor discounted the third possiibility on the grcunds that Reid "wouldn't go through all this" for what is, in effect, a straightforward land sale.

"All this" is a comprehensive, detailed report including extensive background information on the proposal; the site's strategic location ("undoubtedly the most spectacular development in North America in terms of land utilization and consumer service . . ."); estimates of income and expenditure for both the hotel and commercial aspects of the site; and return on sale of condominiums.

"It's a fine, solid presentation," one realtor said in admiration.

B.C. Cools Olympic Hopes

Premier Barrett indicated today it is "most unlikely" his government will give financial support to bring the beleaguered 1976 winter Olympic games to British Columbia.

But the federal government, through Health Minister John Munro, said Ottawa is willing to stand by its original commitment of $10 million towards the games . . . if B.C. maintains its original position on financing.

And he added, if the province renews its "over-all commitment" on the original application, Ottawa may consider revising upwards its contribution.

Under the Social Credit government of two years ago, B.C. pledged up to $10 millions towards the estimated $21 million cost to bring the games here.

Barrett said the government definitely will not spend "a lot of money" just to have the Olympics held in B.C. He said estimated costs of a highway built between Vancouver and the Garibaldi site, according to Highways Minister Bob Strachan, would run to about $48 million.

"We're not going to spend that kind of money," Barrett said. "We can build an awful lot of chronic care hospitals with that kind of money."

Barrett told reporters he has received no official representations from anyone connected with the Vancouver bid to stage the winter games. And he said that even if representations had been received, it would be "most unlikely" that B.C. would contribute financially.

Later, Barrett's office released a form letter which is being sent out to any persons who have written the premier about possible B.C. participation in the games.

Barrett's letter reads: "Thank you for your recent letter concerning the possibility of British Columbia being the site of the 1976 Winter Olympics.

ONTARIO BOOSTS PUBLIC TRANSIT

TORONTO (CP) — A $1.3-billion plan to encourage public transit in Ontario cities and towns during the next decade was revealed today by Premier William Davis.

The plan, which applies to smaller communities as well as larger urban centres, would have the provincial government pay 75 per cent of costs of building new public transportation facilities to shift emphasis away from urban expressways.

Emphasizing "people first," the plan calls for transportation systems capable of carrying 10,000 to 20,000 passengers an hour.

"In these days of advancing technology, it would be folly to continue to rely solely on the present-day use of the automobile and our other existing systems of transportation," the premier said.

"We now have before us a unique opportunity to move forward from pollution and bumper-to-bumper traffic jams."

"With the multitude of demands on limited public funds, we must find less expensive ways to move people."

The premier told members of the Ontario legislature and municipal leaders gathered at the Science Centre to hear the policy statement that not only have expressways become prohibitively expensive within city boundaries, but so have subways.

"Our technical people tell us that subway construction costs have reached such a high level that few municipalities throughout the world can continue their construction," said Davis.

Fiery Death of a Film Stuntman

Dangerous Cold Pills Face Ban

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal food and drug directorate has taken the first step towards banning the sale of pain killers containing both phenacetin and salicylates (aspirin). Many headache and cold tablets would be affected.

In a trade letter to drug makers released today, the directorate announced proposed regulations to end the wholesale trade in such compounds by May 1. Retail outlets could continue to sell off their existing stocks after that date.

Use of combinations of phenacetin and aspirin has been blamed for kidney damage and other medical disorders. A recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal criticized use of the combination products and said doctors and the public should be made aware of the dangers.

One study reported in the journal said one in every 20 persons taking dialysis treatment for damaged kidneys is the victim of such combination drugs. Such products had to be taken in large numbers for a long time before harm is done.

In an interview today, P. A. Soucy, special assistant to the director of the drug directorate, said the proposed ban would affect "a good number of products" still on the market, including Excedrin. Two years ago, more than 300 over-the-counter products contained the combination.

Many manufacturers of popular brands of tablets that previously contained both phenacetin and aspirin had taken the step on their own already, he said.

For example, Frosst removed phenacetin from their headache tablets voluntarily about one year ago, he said. Anacin did the same even earlier when the first reports of dangers began.

Manufacturers have until Jan. 15 to make representation against the proposed changes.

Travel Ban Lifted

THURMONT, Md. (AP) — President Nixon lifted today a rigid government ban on travel of United States aircraft and ships to China. The action, announced by a spokesman at Nixon's Camp David, Md., retreat, is a first step toward eventual establishment of scheduled U.S. air and sea service to China.

Body in Lift

TORONTO (CP) — A 53-year-old Minden, Ont., man visiting the city was beaten to death in a downtown hotel Tuesday night and his body stuffed into an elevator. Police said the victim, William Morgan Mark, was attacked in a third-floor room and then dragged to the elevator of the Waverley Hotel. The elevator was then sent to the lobby. A guest entering the elevator door in the lobby almost tripped over the body.

Montrealer Axed

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have arrested a Vietnamese student in connection with the axe slaying of one man and the wounding of another Tuesday night. A man about 25 was found in the second-floor apartment with his head cut off. Another man was slashed in the arms and chest.

First B-52 Lost

Times News Services

SAIGON — A United States B-52 bomber was shot down today in the heaviest attack of the war on North Vietnam.

It was the first of the giant bombers shot down in the war. All six crew members were rescued.

U.S. command said it was not known whether the $8 million plane was hit by a surface-to-air missile or a missile fired from a MiG fighter plane.

Also lost in the heavy bombing raids were two smaller jets, including another of the swing-wing F-111s.

The F-111 was the fourth of the $15 million planes lost since the controversial all-weather attack bomber returned to combat on Sept. 28. The command said it disappeared before dawn Tuesday while on a solo mission just above the demilitarized zone.

The command also reported that a marine F-4 fighter-bomber was shot down in southern Laos Monday.

Fifteen B-52 missions were reported in North Vietnam below the 20th parallel during the 24-hour period ending at noon today; topping a pre-

U.K. Immigration Curbs Threaten Tory Split

LONDON (UPI) — A government plan to allow citizens of European Common Market nations free entry into Britain but restrict immigration from British Commonwealth nations threatened today to split the ruling Conservative party.

Political sources predicted that up to 35 Conservative members of Parliament would abstain or vote against the proposal when it comes up for debate tonight in the House of Commons.

Under the government plan, Common Market citizens would be allowed to enter Britan freely to work once the country becomes part of the market Jan. 1. At the same time, Commonwealth citizens would become subject to the same immigration restrictions now applied against aliens.

Conservative member of parliament Evelyn King called the policy "inhumane" toward Australians, Canadians, New Zealanders and other Commonwealth citizens.

"That they are now to be treated as inferior in status to Italians, Ugandan Asians or Germans and denied free access to Britain is not only foolish, it is a constitutional monstrosity because the British queen is their Queen, too," he said.

King, speaking at London University, said the Commonwealth citizens were relatives and that restricting their immigration hinted at an anti-British attitude.

"It is time British governments understood that their first duty is to be pro-British and to say that they are pro-British," he said.

Political sources predict the opposition within party ranks could erase the Conservatives 26-vote majority and cause the defeat of the proposal.

The government offered its plan under the Immigration Act of 1971 and a campaign promise to set up a single system of immigration control.

1,200 Years In Jail

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Richard Speck, who once said "the chair is a good way to straighten a fellow out," sat silently in the courtroom as the judge sentenced him to serve up to 1,200 years in prison for the 1966 murders of eight nurses on Chicago's South Side.

An execution order was put off pending a number of appeals. Then on June 29, the U.S. Supreme Court declared the death penalty unconstitutional in most cases and the Illinois Supreme Court ordered a hearing to determine a new sentence for Speck.

Tuesday, Judge Richard Fitzgerald of Cook County circuit court, said: "The only fair and just sentence in this case is one in which the defendant would be confined for life."

Syrian Tactics Push Egypt

Manchester Guardian

BEIRUT — More Soviet arms were flown into Damascus Tuesday as the Syrian army and air force engaged the Israelis in some of the heaviest Mideast fighting since the 1967 war. This is the third big clash between the two countries in less than a month and the main question — if they continue — is how long Egypt can afford to do nothing comparable along the Suez canal.

The fighting stems from a new spirit of pugnacity on the part of the Syrian Baathists. In the past few weeks the Baathists have modified the tight restrictions which they had hitherto imposed on guerrilla operations in the Golan Heights. At the same time Syrian leaders have been more consistently militant in their speeches than at any time since the six-day war.

Recently the semi-official Damascus daily Al-Thaurah denounced the Mideast ceasefire as "another weapon" in the hands of the Israelis. Tuesday Damascus Radio commented: "The only language which the Arab nation must use with an enemy whose policy is based on expansionism is fighting . . . the Arab masses re waiting impatiently for the day when all the Arab armies will take part in the battle . . ."

The Baathists motives are not clear. One thing is sure. Behind this new militancy lies some political need rather than a real desire to fight. But it must be a very compelling need, for the risks are great, as Syria's losses Tuesday indicate. One factor is popular pressure for retaliation against the Israelis who, since the killings at the Munich Olympics, have carried out at least two highly devastating raids on civilians.

Since Egypt expelled its Russian experts Syria has been worried lest Egypt, like Jordan, might go it alone in a peaceful settlement, leaving Syria high and dry without the return of the Golan. Evidently with Russian encouragement, it seems to be showing the Egyptians that it can sabotage any peace-seeking initiative at its or the Russians expense. Three Antonov transport planes are reported to have arrived in Damascus Tuesday as part of a new airlift of emergency arms supplies.

In Cairo the Egyptian cabinet was reported to have discussed the latest fighting and to have taken "the necessary measures." There's no doubt that President Anwar Sadat, facing mounting internal pressures, is deeply preoccupied about these additional ones from Damascus. He dispatched his new war minister to Damascus for three days last week where, according to some reports, he agreed to put some Egyptian planes under Syrian command.

GOLAN SEALED

From AP-REUTER

The Israeli army sealed off the Golan Heights again today and kept its troops there on full alert in the wake of their big battle with Syrian forces Tuesday.

The Israeli command said the plateau, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 war, was "quiet but tense."

Damascus radio called on all Arab governments to join with Syria in repelling Israeli aggression and pledged that Syria "will retaliate against any aggression with a tougher one, irrespective of sacrifices."

College Financing Means New Malaspina Campus

Abolition of referendums for community college capital projects assures a new campus for Malaspina College and brings to an end prolonged financial struggles among districts supporting the college.

Local taxpayers from Cowichan to Campbell River were reluctant to foot the bill for a 40 per cent share of building a new campus, Cowichan school district threatened to withdraw its support if a referendum were launched.

Now Malaspina will draw up plans for a new campus on a disused army camp site west of Nanaimo town centre, college council chairman Beattie Davis said today.

The minister of education announced Tuesday that legislation will be presented next spring to relieve local taxpayers of their 40 per cent share of approved capital projects.

Davis called the announcement "one of the greatest pieces of legislation ever in the post-secondary field."

He said the college occupies cramped quarters at the old Nanaimo hospital with an enrolment of 1,100. The 165-acre campus, which it is hoped the provincial government will be able to buy from the federal government, will be designed for 1,400.

Camosun College may manage to have its $100,000 rent for the Lansdowne building accepted as a capital cost, but otherwise no projects are in view, college council chairman Carron Jameson said.

Camosun's gleaming new Interurban Road campus was paid for by the federal government, he said.

Jameson said spending on technological equipment would be helped.

BLOOD CLINIC SURPASSES DAY GOALS

The number of blood donors at Red Cross House totalled 134 Tuesday, narrowly surpassing for the second day the goal of 125 and bringing the two-day total to 268.

Today's clinic is at Royal Roads military college, from 3 to 5:30 p.m. and 7 to 8 in the evening and the public is welcome.

The clinic Thursday will be in the Georgian Room of The Empress, from 2 to 5 p.m. and 6:30 to 8:30 in the evening and the public is invited.

"As of this date the government has not received a proposal in writing in regard to our participation in a bid for the 1976 Olympics.

"I may say to you however that the costs involved in putting on the winter Olympics have become so prohibitive that there is very little likelihood that the government of British Columbia would make a major investment of public funds in such an undertaking."

A spokesman for Barrett's office said the letters coming to the premier concerning the Olympics—about 50 in all—have been running heavily against B.C. participation.

Earlier this month, after voters in the state of Colorado turned down public expenditure for the games to be held in Denver, the site originally selected by the International Olympic Committee, Barrett and several of his ministers said the province would look into the possibility of staging the games at Garibaldi Park.

A group representing the Vancouver bid to hold the games at Garibaldi had applied to the IOC, but Denver won the contest.

After the Colorado veto, Barrett said his government will look into the costs of staging the games. "If the costs are prohibitive, I don't see us going into it," he said.

A final decision on the site of the 1976 games will not be made until early in 1973.

vious high of 13 such missions during one 24-hour period.

While the command would not disclose how many B-52s made up each mission, other U.S. military sources said there were about 45 in all and they dropped more than 1,300 tons of explosives on the southern panhandle of North Vietnam.

U.S. military sources said the B-52 attacks were unusually heavy to make up for the curtailment in fighter-bomber strikes due to the monsoon weather.

The U.S. command said their targets were supply caches awaiting shipment into northern Laos and to North Vietnamese forces in South Vietnam just below the demilitarized zone.

The North Vietnamese foreign ministry issued a special communique saying that the American air strikes have taken a heavy toll of civilian lives and destroyed dams, hospitals, churches and state farms during the last three weeks.

The foreign ministry demanded that the United States stop the bombing and "sign with equal speed the peace agreement" worked out in Paris last month.

Meanwhile in France, Henry Kissinger resumed his Vietnam peace talks with Hanoi's top negotiators today after an overnight trip to Brussels and an hour-long talk with President Suharto of Indonesia.

U.S. President Nixon's security adviser and the North Vietnamese politburo member, Le Duc Tho, went into the third meeting of their secret peace talks.

They met in the same suburban villa, the property of the French Communist party, where they conferred for 5½ hours Monday and 4½ hours Tuesday.

Indonesia is one of four countries that have been asked to supervise the cease-fire Kissinger and Tho are trying to work out. Presumably the U.S. presidential adviser went to Brussels to discuss this with Suharto, who is on tour of European capitals.

Total estimated cost of the project is given as $13.2 million, including $2.5 million as the cost of the land (Reid is reputed to have paid some $600,000 for the 2.5-acre site several years ago, although as recently as July some city hall people understood he still had not exercised his options to purchase the several parcels of land involved).

The brochure estimates the return on investment at 23.1 per cent.

At noon today an executive from Reid's office phoned the Times newsroom to say the organization wants to make a statement on the situation, but intends to do so in the form of paid advertising space.

He declined to make any comment for this story, saying "We want to give you paid news."

Richard Brown, 34, was dragged from the huge engine on a Ghana Airways VC-10 jetliner as it was being tested.

He was taken to hospital where doctors amputated his torn arm. Surgeons reported his condition was satisfactory.

Seawater covers Fraser Valley farmlands

Floods Follow Surrey Dike Break

SURREY (CP) — Hundreds of acres of farmland were flooded Tuesday when the sea knocked a 40-foot hole in a river dike in South Surrey, about 25 miles southeast of Vancouver.

The break in the 10-foot-wide earth dike, near the mouth of the Nicomekl River at Mud Bay, later widened to more than 70 feet through tidal action, and Municipal Manager Dan Closkey said it likely would be Friday or Saturday before the breach could be closed.

Closkey said material would have to be assembled and floated in via barge at high tide from further up the river, with work not expected to start before Thursday.

Damage to buildings was slight, but Surrey Mayor William Vanderzalm said if the land was covered by salt water for any length of time it could be useless for up to five years.

The mayor said a piledriver would be used to mend the dike, with sandbags dumped in behind the piles. There is no road access to the dike.

The water covered upwards of 300 acres Tuesday night.

Dairy farmers hit by the flooding waded through knee-deep water Tuesday to lead cows to safer pastures.

Tri-Level Talks End, Cities' Voice Heard

By BOB DOUGLAS

TORONTO (CP) — Canadian municipalities, by means of the first tri-level conference which ended here Tuesday, have found a place to air their problems—a national forum they shared on an equal footing with the federal and provincial governments.

A second tri-level conference will be held before the end of 1973 following a compromise agreement reached Tuesday afternoon. The solution was worked out by conference chairman Senator Carl Goldenberg of Montreal, a well-known labor conciliator.

The agreement also provides for tri-level consultations on a regional level. These discussions would deal with urban problems in a specific province or group of provinces.

The decisions were termed "historic" by Urban Affairs Minister Ron Basford, Fraser Mooney, Nova Scotia minister of municipal affairs, and Mayor D. G. Newman of Whitby, Ont. They were chairmen of the federal, provincial and municipal delegations respectively.

The municipal and federal delegations appeared to give the least ground in the two-day conference. The provincial group, though not united, seemed cool to further tri-level talks as the conference opened.

While the general provincial brief did not close the door to further tri-level conferences, it suggested municipal problems could best be handled by the annual conference of provincial municipal affairs ministers.

GAIN INDEPENDENCE

Former Halifax mayor Allan O'Brien, who was a consultant to the Maritime governments at the conference, said the municipalities were for the first time allowed to take a position independent of the provinces.

Mr. O'Brien, now a political science professor at the University of Western Ontario at London, said the municipalities had to take this separate national stand before a discussion could begin on redistribution of financial resources.

The municipal delegation submitted a brief to the conference demanding a careful examination of municipal finances at another tri-level meeting.

The brief said the municipal tax field, based mainly on property tax, is growing more slowly than the income tax area which belongs to the federal and provincial governments.

But municipal responsibilities are increasing. Some needs could not be met because of lack of funds.

The agenda for the next meeting has not yet been decided.

Free Bus Plans For Christmas

Free bus transportation for certain groups during the Christmas shopping rush is being planned, a B.C. Hydro spokesman said today.

A number of alternative "special arrangements" are being considered, the spokesman said, but will not be announced for two weeks.

The scheme, planned in conjunction with downtown business groups in Victoria and Vancouver, will probably involve free transportation for senior citizens during a short period before Christmas.

Don Nixon, president of the Downtown Victoria Association, said free buses are part of the association's efforts to take the commercial "hard sell" out of Christmas shopping.

"We're also planning some kind of free transportation from one end of Douglas Street to the other," he said.

"We're going to have high school students carolling on Friday nights in Centennial Square and then splitting up and singing in small groups around Salvation Army kettles," Nixon said.

"We're trying to get away from the hard sell," he added, "to revive the Christmas spirit."

Entry Through the Front Door

Although Immigration Minister Mackasey has been criticized in some quarters for autocratic use of his powers in denying entry to a number of Asian visitors to this country, there is a factual background which should be recognized. Canada is under no obligation to allow any particular would-be immigrants into the country; no foreigner has a right to entry except that allowed by law—and the law can be changed to suit Canadian wishes.

The recent rejection of "visitors" from India, many of whom were turned back at the airport in Toronto for a long journey home, brought Canada's whole immigration problem once more into the news. It has been common knowledge that new regulations put into effect five years ago have been abused by many foreign applicants.

The significant change was that persons arriving in Canada for a visit could then apply for landed immigrant status, leading to permanent residence. Formerly such applications had to be made in the immigrant's home country. Once in Canada, it appeared easier to receive the extension.

In October and early November there were as many as 1,000 persons a day—from Latin America, the West Indies and Asia—arriving to visit friends or see the country, but without specific return trip dates. It became apparent that a sizable traffic in would-be immigrants was being organized in some countries abroad, with the object of getting clients into Canada as eventually permanent residents.

It was this traffic, and the racket which it perpetrates on its victims, which Mr. Mackasey sought to halt. His action was timely and necessary. Equally necessary are legislative amendments to tighten up the immigration regulations so that such loopholes are closed.

Canada can use immigrants and should not close its doors. But we are in a position to set our own conditions for entry, and these conditions should be clear and enforceable. Many thousands of persons now in Canada have arrived illegally over the years. Many thousands more—of all nationalities, colors and creeds—have become good citizens through normal legal channels.

The policy regarding visitors is a generous one—some 14 million from all over the world come every year. But permanent residence should be based on Canada's requirements—leavened from time to time by generous admission of groups such as the refugees from Uganda. Illegal or evasive entry is a poor start for good citizenship.

A Matter of Ways and Means

When Mr. Len Marchand made his maiden speech to the Commons after the general election of 1968 the Liberal member for Kamloops-Cariboo said: "I am an Indian who is a member of Parliament. I am not just the Indian people's member; but I must speak as well on their behalf." Mr. Marchand's dual obligation to the riding in general and to the native people in particular was clearly outlined and accepted. Mr. Marchand was re-elected on October 30.

Mr. Frank Calder, first elected for Atlin in 1949 and now minister without portfolio in the Barrett cabinet, has also vigorously promoted the interests of the Indian people, but within a framework of co-operation with the majority. He is now involved in a survey of the needs of British Columbia Indians.

The rise to prominence of native people is in danger of being unnecessarily disturbed by an organization called the National Indian Movement which would substitute confrontation and racial chauvinism for gradualism and mutual acceptability. The movement plans protest marches and may form its own political party to be "truly representative of native peoples."

What Canada must avoid is the ghetto mentality which fractures society and which in the end breeds violence and greater misery. There is much to be done to assure the Indians of their rights and to see that they achieve due recognition for their unique achievements and culture — and the Marchand and Calder way is best and should be emulated. But it is equally the responsibility of the white population not to drive the Indians to desperation by delay, apathy and neglect.

Not Enough Food

Addeke Boerma, director general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, says that the world food supply has, for the second successive year, fallen below the needs of an increasing population. Whether this is due to unseasonal weather in many food producing countries — crop failures have been reported in some of the most populous nations — or reflects a widening gap between man's capacity to produce nourishment and his capacity to produce children, the situation is declared very serious by the FAO official.

The high hopes of the "green revolution" are shadowed by the sheer bulk of expanding humanity. Science makes it possible for non-productive, or low-productive, areas of the earth to provide more food. But that approach to creating a well-fed world is frustrated when too many additional hungry mouths appear.

Without population control, nature eventually will enforce its own grim laws of survival, balancing the equation between food supplies and human consumers by the cruel instrument of famine.

Addeke Boerma has not phrased the dilemma so harshly, but the point is inescapable.

HAROLD GREER

A Threat to Ontario Hydro

TORONTO — Ontario Hydro, which is a government "Commission", is to become a "Crown Corporation". This decision, not surprisingly, has been greeted by a massive public yawn. On the surface, it appears to be just another case of the Davis government's propensity for tinkering with form and structure, for pouring old wine into new bottles.

The yawn, one must hope, is merely the lull before the storm. This change in structure has all the smell of a departure from Hydro's socialist philosophy and if the government gets away with it, the public will find itself paying more not only for electricity but for competing forms of energy.

Hydro's philosophy and mandate, ever since it was created 62 years ago, has been "power at cost". The result by and large has been cheap power: residential rates in Ontario, for example, are about half those in New York state, 40 per cent below Michigan, 15 per cent below Quebec, 47 per cent below British Columbia.

Key Element

Now the second largest publicly-owned utility in North America (TVA is bigger), with assets of $5.1 billion and a labour force of 24,000, Hydro's performance has undoubtedly been a key element in Ontario's economic growth. Not only has it supplied the province with all the cheap electrical power it has needed, its presence has helped to keep the cost of other energy in line — as, for example, fuel oil and natural gas for home heating.

It seems incredible that the government would do anything to hazard this situation and, of course, it hasn't admitted that it is. But the management consultants, economic theorists and other denizens of the big business world have been "task forcing" Hydro for the government for the past 18 months, and the government seems only too willing to go along with their thinking and recommendations.

And the thinking behind the Task Force's first report and recommendations is that Hydro has got to be run according to sound business principles and the free enterprise ethic.

The Task Force doesn't come right out and say this, but the idea runs through its report like a musical theme.

Thus, one of the reasons for changing Hydro's corporate form to that of a Crown corporation is that it provides a structure which would "closely resemble the organizational form of private business and set the tone for a proper emphasis on economic performance and on the idea of a 'quick-moving and progressive business enterprise'."

Moreover, a Crown corporation "would be expected to organize its accounts . . . in the same manner as do similar firms in the private sector thereby facilitating comparison of performance with such firms."

"Power at Cost"

Since private utilities are in business to make a profit and Hydro is not, such comparisons are absurd on the face of it unless it is contended that Hydro should indeed be required to show a profit. The Task Force doesn't go quite that far, but it does present a vague and disjointed argument that Hydro's "power at cost" philosophy is somehow bad for business.

"A privately owned business must, over the long term, earn a return on the capital it employs comparable to that which such capital could earn elsewhere," the Task Force declares. "Although the situation is not identical in a publicly owned corporation, there is a valid argument in support of Hydro's earning a return on the capital it employs comparable to that earned by similar utilities and by other firms dealing in competitive energy resources. This it is not doing . . .

"A failure to earn an economically appropriate rate of return as a consequence of keeping the price of electricity too low is likely in the long run to lead to excessive use of electrical energy and so to resource misallocation, as well as to financing difficulties. On the other hand an increase in prices sufficient to generate an economically appropriate rate of return would lead to an improved allocation of resources in the energy sector of the economy, and would reduce the requirements for capital from external sources."

The Task Force said it will expand on this argument in a subsequent report, for which surcease one can only be grateful. As it stands, however, it is arrant nonsense which in practice can only lead to needlessly higher power costs.

Impossible to Define

In the first place, it is impossible to say what Hydro earns or should earn on the capital it employs because it is impossible to define Hydro's "capital" except in the most arbitrary manner. Hydro, for example, has received hundreds of millions from the Ontario governemnt over the years to subsidize various programs, chiefly rural electrification. Is this "capital"? Not according to the Task Force. "Equity" in Ontario Hydro consists of bookkeeping credits built up by the municipal utilities to whom Hydro wholesales power. Are these paper credits "capital"? Yes indeed, says the Task Force.

And it is on this basis that the Task Force theorists have calculated that Hydro is not earning a return on capital comparable to firms "dealing in competitive energy resources."

Even if the Task Force's argument is accepted, however, it amounts to saying Hydro power rates should go up in order to prevent an "excessive" use of electricity and a "misallocation" of energy resources. These are terms that could mean anything. The Task Force appears to use them in the sense that it is more efficient to burn fossil fuels for space and water heating at the point of utilization rather than to convert them to electricity at a generating station, and thus conserve scarce resources. It then turns around and admits that Hydro's nuclear power generation renders this argument specious.

JAMES RESTON

Peddling, Not Eating, Baloney

WASHINGTON — The 10 weeks between the November election of the President of the United States and his inauguration on Jan. 20 are probably more important than any other 10 weeks of his four or eight-year stay in the White House.

For in this short span, the President can change his team, change his mind, change the whole tone of his Administration, retain his most effective men and retire the rest, correct past mistakes, and adjust his policies and personnel to the changing problems of the future.

Maybe this is what is meant by the "genius" of the Democratic political system. At least in the executive branch of the government, it makes allowances for the accidents and fragility of human life, and liberates the President from the past.

Nobody else at the top of other large American institutions, with the possible exception of football coaches and baseball managers, has such freedom to act on reality, and even they can be fired over the telephone after any game that goes wrong.

Not Applied Widely Enough

The only trouble with the system is that it isn't applied as widely as it might be. The President isn't stuck with the seniority system, but the Congress is. Who among the presidents and chief executives of corporations, universities, or hamburger stands wouldn't like to have the resignations of their colleagues on their desks every four years?

Think of the possibilities! The Congress could promote the young men who are coming instead of being stuck with the old men who are going. The Church could send its weary bishops and preachers off to some comfortable retreat. And of course, newspaper publishers could toss all their aging columnists to the photographers and the obit writers.

Fortunately, President Nixon has recognized that he is the envy of every other chief executive in the land, and he is taking advantage of his special position. He knew that it was the custom after any election for all his appointees to put their resignations at his disposal, but he didn't count on their good taste or manners. He had his press secretary announce publicly that he not only expected their resignations, but that he intended to act on them, and maybe separate as many as 2,000 top officials from the Federal service.

This put him in an awkward position, as the Washington Post was quick to point out. For he had defended everything and everybody in his Administration during the election campaign, and asked, "Why break up a winning team?", but now he was threatening to break it up, as if he were breaking up an old Democratic Administration instead of his own.

PRESIDENT NIXON

". . . doesn't swallow it himself"

Nevertheless it is hard to fault him for being tough on his own team and looking to the future. This may be the best thing about Nixon. He peddles a lot of baloney, but he doesn't swallow it himself. He has got away with a lot of mediocre characters in secondary positions in his first term, mainly because he had a few brilliant characters in the primary jobs, but now he says he is going to get rid of the amiable failures, and it will be interesting to see whether his great victory has made him more willing to appoint the best men available.

He used his appointive power very cautiously when he was first elected. Though Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York was probably the logical choice for Secretary of State, especially since his friend and protege, Henry Kissinger, was going to the White House, the President passed him by for William Rogers.

There was even some talk back then of Mayor John Lindsay of New York going to the State Department as under-secretary, but in the end the President chose safer and dimmer men. As a result, while there are many able men in the Cabinet, particularly George Shultz at the Treasury and Elliot Richardson at H.E.W., nobody close to the President except Kissinger, has attracted much attention.

Confident and Secure

Now, however, the President is undoubtedly more confident and secure and he would certainly dominate any ministry of talents, no matter how distinguished. He has a strong, intensely loyal but overblown White House staff — almost a kind of politburo or private government within the public government. Dr. Kissinger alone has over 100 assistants working under him in the old State Department building.

Accordingly, substantial cuts in the bureaucracy could undoubtedly be made with profit. The President has talked a lot about decentralizing power, but has actually centralized it in the White House more than any other President since Rovevelt. Also it is this monopoly of executive power in the hands of a few able but suspicious men in the White House that has given such an air of secrecy to the first Nixon Administration, but now he is at least talking about having a more "open" second term, and this could change the tone and temper of the next four years.

Burning Leaves

If Victoria ever offers a "Good Neighbor Sam" award, may it go to the fellow on Aldeane Road in Colwood who was burning leaves on Sunday, November 12.

The area is considered to be a nice, quiet, upper middle-class residential area, bordered on one side by a golf course.

At the entrance to Aldeane Road, I noticed a haze in the near distance, which didn't worry me too much, and I still wasn't too annoyed when I had to close my car windows to avoid gagging and wheezing at the smoke which was sure to drift in the windows. But what really disturbed me was the fact that the homeowner in question was burning neat little piles of leaves, not one foot from the road surface. There is no ditch or barrier separating private property from the public highway on that side of the road.

For those of you who still haven't caught on, let me point out that an automobile travelling at twenty m.p.h. is naturally going to cause air turbulence, which in turn will cause any smoldering material to drift into the roadway under, and perhaps into, people's cars.

To end on a philosophical note, there is one saving grace about apartment living. The only smoke I have encountered is from a well-done pizza, but then at least my neighbors haven't run over the burning embers with their cars. — Austin Peckham, 3-314 Cook St.

Way of Life?

I should like to commend you for the publication of the article by Peter Jenkins of the Manchester Guardian — hardly a Communist organ: "Fear, greed manipulated by Nixon."

To me the landslide victory of Nixon is not a matter of such importance as the clear indication that the American public is prepared to accept the scandals, corruption and the unbelieveable actions of the Republican Party during the election. Such actions were given publicity by such first-class organs as the New York Times and the Washington Post, but apparently must have been brushed off by the American voter as just a way of life in the U.S. in 1972.

This, to me, is the frightening aspect of the election, and the thought that the world must face another four years of rule by people who obviously feel that this is what the world needs and wants. Here in Canada we are by no means perfect, but thank Heavens we have not reached such depths of degradation. — M. P. B. Wrixon, 1680 Poplar Ave.

From the Times of November 22, 1912:

OTTAWA — Sir Richard McBride's latest naval outbreak at Ottawa has been compared by friendly journals to "a strong wind from th west." The simile is correct. Wind it was and strong as wind. With characteristic self-complacency the British Columbia premier not merely demanded that Canada should have an army and navy second to none in the world, but undertook to criticize Sir Wilfrid Laurier for not announcing his position with regard to the yet unborn Borden naval policy.

Self-Doubt And Disunity Nag Saigon

By DON OBERDORFER
The Washington Post

SAIGON — It is slowly dawning on South Vietnam that the Americans are really going home, that there will be a cease-fire in this country some day soon, and then a march to the boats and planes for the trip back across the Pacific.

The Vietnamization of the ground war took place quite a while ago; the Vietnamization of the air war is proceeding. Now this country is undergoing something more fundamental — the Vietnamization of its hopes and fears about the future.

In earlier times, the responsibility for affairs here could be attributed to the foreigners. The French administered a special and direct form of colonial rule in this part of South Vietnam, which they called Cochin China, and, in 1954 they were supplanted by the Americans. But now, after 16 years of insurgency, hot war, escalation and de-escalation, the Americans are leaving and no other world power is waiting in the wings.

Not Logical

Given the riches and the talents in South Vietnam, the lengthy experience with Communist opposition, the bulging storehouses of weapons and ammunition and the continuing financial and political support of the United States, there would seem to be no logical reason for self doubt. Nevertheless, it appears to be pervasive.

Despite a natural concern about North Vietnamese troop withdrawal from the south the principal worry does not revolve around the military question. The Communist armies are considered seriously weakened by past reverses. The government forces number 1.1 million men armed with close to 2,000 airplanes and helicopters, 1,400 tanks and armored vehicles, 15,000 artillery pieces and more than 750,000 M-16 rifles. While the Communists are also well armed, they can by no means match this.

It is political will and political ability — not military prowess — that is the continuing concern among articulate South Vietnamese. Very few of them seem to feel that in the long run their shattered and somewhat indulgent society can survive the political attack of the disciplined, tightly organized North Vietnamese and Viet Cong.

"There is not enough unity in this country," is a sentiment one hears over and over from Vietnamese friends, and it is a litany heard often in the past. Efforts to forge a united front in times of crisis — for example, just after the 1968 Tet offensive — were short-lived. Similar ideas are current in Saigon, now, but without much indication of likely success.

The yearning for unity is in keeping with the Vietnamese desire for harmony and stability under the rule of a wise and recognized leader. This has been long denied by a conspiratorial factionalism inherited from French times, and the democratic dissent fostered by the American system of checks and balances.

While President Nguyen van Thieu is the elected and "constitutional" leader — and nearly everyone agrees that at the moment there is no alternative and he should be supported — he has still not been fully accepted as the rightful leader in the Vietnamese tradition.

"The social conditions are too terrible, there is too much corruption and injustice," says a senator living in Saigon. "People in the countryside particularly, suffer too much from this and the Communists can exploit it. Even in the army, those who fight get nothing and those who do not fight get everything. So how can we compete?"

"Reform" drives and anti-corruption campaigns have been launched repeatedly, but so far none seem to have done the job. The trouble, some say, is with the system in which nepotism, friendship and money have become keys to positions of influence.

'Leave It to Young'

Beset by foreign domination on one side and a Communist threat on the other, the frail political creature that is South Vietnam has had a difficult time finding itself. More Asian states became fully independent at the end of World War II, nearly 30 years ago, but due to circumstances beyond its control, Vietnam was tragically divided and South Vietnam had the short end of a chance. The main hope now is that a national spirit and sense of self-esteem will fill the gap of the departing Americans, and carry it along.

After 45,000 American dead, in the end it all comes down to this: Can the Vietnamese organize themselves below the 17th parallel and come to terms somehow with those living under a different political system, with a different set of arms suppliers, above the "temporary" demarcation line of 1954.

When the last American billet is vacated, when the once new "Pentagon East" outside Saigon is closed, when the last report of the last "body count" is slipped into the file and sent off to permanent storage in Kansas City, when "protective reaction" strikes are as much a thing of the past as "search and destroy" missions and those glorious, now forgotten battles such as Operation Hastings, Operation Attleboro and the rest, when the last American major with the last pointer has stood in front of the last press briefing and said goodbye, then it will all come down in the end — as in the beginning — to the Vietnamese. And that day will be coming very soon.

Despite the fears of so many in the south and the seemingly iron resolve of the leaders in the north, hope springs eternal that in some mysterious and perhaps incomprehensible way the Vietnamese will find a way to work it out without killing more of one another in fratricidal strife. It is a hunch and nothing more. The Vietnamese are human though, and they do not enjoy dying any more than the rest of us.

Tragic Division

Some of the shrewdest Vietnamese observers say true peace — as distinct from a temporary truce — will never come until this generation of leaders in the north has passed from the scene and been replaced by younger men educated in the pragmatic schools in Eastern Europe. Perhaps so, but it does not necessarily have to be that way if the United States, the Soviet Union and China are willing to let the Vietnamese deal with their own problems without raising the stakes to international strategic levels.

"If they could leave it to the young people on both sides, I think we could have peace," says a wispy young poet songwriter named Trinh Cong Son. He grew up in the old imperial capital of Hue and has seen enough of war and death to last a lifetime. To express his hopes, which surpass his fears, he recently wrote a ballad of two lovers, one from the south and the other the north.

'Scars Will Vanish'

The time is not right for it to be published here, but at the bidding of a friend he wrote down the stanzas to express his view. Translated into English it reads:

"Though I have not yet seen Hanoi,
"Though as of today you have not glimpsed Saigon,
"Strangely my spirit has not abandoned hope
"My heart knows this homeland will see peace,
"It nourishes strong saplings of tenderness.
"Though I have not yet seen Hanoi,
"Though as of today you have not glimpsed Saigon,
"My love and I share the same speech which is Vietnamese,
"Oh how our love makes a rubble of hate,
"Relishing the sounds of laughter rippling over our devastated land.
"Though my being languish with waiting
"Though my love's smile wilt upon her lips
"Our fortitude awaits the new tomorrow
"Four our homeland will have its reunion
"Of the two sides whose blood and bones have shaken the depths of mankind.
"Though I have not yet been to Hanoi,
"Though as of today you have never travelled to Saigon,
"The common flag of both flutters in our fibre
"Today, tomorrow our feet will tread both regions
"And the scars on the heart from our people's sorrow will melt away."

'Greening of Norway' Sought by Young Group

By BERNARD NOSSITER
The Washington Post

OSLO — One of the great unsung political battles of our time was fought on a university campus here last spring when Green Grass triumphed over the Marxist-Leninists to win control of the Oslo Student Union.

Green Grass is not a drug-related group, quite the contrary. "Drugs make you apolitical; they depoliticize you," says Ivar Bjoerklund, a 22-year-old student of social anthropology and a Green Grass leader.

Green Grass is a remarkably likable collection of serious young Vikings who are against crude economic growth, centralized power, capitalist control of factories, the depletion of natural resources, the war in Vietnam, the Common Market and lots more.

What they are for — "simpler structures, bringing people closer to nature and production, self-sufficient agrarian societies" — is far less clear. But they are eloquent, decent and bright and their triumph over the Marxist-Leninists probably says something about the current fashions among the more engaged students in Western Europe.

A few weeks ago they did suffer a defeat. Green Grassers lay down on a railroad track in a futile effort to halt the deportation of a band of gypsies. There was solace even so.

"We did not stop the train," recalled Ingrid Skodbo, 26, a language student. "But we did communicate our concern to the gypsies."

Sigurd Allern, the Marxist-Leninist 26-year-old chairman, is a graduate sociology student who lays down tight controls over what his followers shall study. "The Communist Manifesto," Lenin's "State and Revolution" and any of Chairman Mao's works are in, he told me. Marx's "Das Kapital" is considered too tough and such important theoreticians as Hilferding, Rosa Luxembourg and Gramsci are ideologically impure.

It is some measure of the radicalization of European campus politics that this splinter within a faction ran the Oslo University Student Union for 2½ years.

Allern, an intense young man who not only studies at the expense of the "bourgeois state" but supports his family on a state-financed research project, readily acknowledges that "left-wing infantilism" toppled his group from student power.

"They said the red front was anti-democratic and sectarian and it was true. But we are changing that. The executive committee no longer hands down slogans. We debate them. The committee no longer selects a candidate slate. We elect one."

Allern is confident his Maoists will come back in office at next spring's election. "Green Grass runs bad (that is, disorganized) meetings," he says. "They have a diffused class analysis and you must have a proper class analysis."

A visiting foreigner can wonder whether Allern is not guilty of wishful thinking. The peculiar Marxist language of his group seems wildly inappropriate in this prosperous, egalitarian welfare state. The spontaneity and looseness of Green Grass seem far more in tune with the questioning, self-critical spirit of the liveliest youngsters on the Oslo campus.

Green Grassers use words like "anarchist" and "populist" to describe themselves. The more philosophically inclined read Marx, Kropotkin and Bakunin for inspiration.

They are strong critics of consumerism — "Soya beans for food and not for face creams," they say. They will not take part in parliamentary politics because "you can't accomplish change by voting but by making people aware of their own power."

★ ★ ★

They like the Yippie idea of "building parallel structures," but they do not admire Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin, who are seen as lightweight clowns, encouraging hedonistic withdrawal from the adult world.

Green Grass control of the student union, a budget of about $28,000 and a big building for meetings, dances and beer, has not been an unmixed blessing.

"All our energy is being used up in administering the union," complains Bjoerklund. "We're swallowed up by the structure;

We're being eaten up by that building."

Even worse, the Marxist-Leninists spent much of the budget on its pet causes and there is not enough left to back the ecological and war-resister groups whom Green Grass would like to help.

The Green Grassers have another problem. Now that Norway has voted "No" to the Common Market, the youngsters are without a major issue around which to mobilize students.

They are planning a "demonstration week" they will "occupy" several hundred empty apartments to dramatize private property's greed in the face of a housing shortage. They will also sit down in the streets to focus attention on the evils of traffic in a quiet city where people and cars move virtually uninterrupted at the height of "rush" hours.

★ ★ ★

In a very real way, the Green Grass dilemma is close to that of Allern's Maoists. How, he was asked, can a Marxist-Leninist group hope for a revolution in a solid society where workers' real incomes rise every year, employment is virtually full and a wide array of amenities are available to all, including free university education and interest free loans for student expenses?

Allern answers solemnly:

"Norwegian people haven't lived in the United States or the slums of England. The Norwegian has a high living standard but he is used to it. He sees himself threatened by inflation, by rationalization. There will be a real political struggle against the bosses."

Bjoerklund of Green Grass talks in metaphor too.

"Social welfare is oil, defensive, a patch on a tire. It is the tire that needs changing."

Norway, of course, is not paradise. But it is far enough removed from many of the ills that afflict modern society so that trumpet calls to action frequently fall on deaf ears.

A Short Circuit to Life

RUSSELL BAKER

The extraordinary events of the Bertle household began innocently enough several years ago when Martha Bertle gave her husband, Ted, an electric razor.

They can't even remember now whether it was a birthday or a Christmas present. In any event, Ted Bertle countered quickly on the next gift-giving occasion by giving Martha an electric carving knife.

It should be clear, of course, that before this exchange, which the Bertles now regard as the take-off point, they had already purchased, over the years, an electric stove, an electric refrigerator, an electric television set, three electric clocks, two electric air-conditioners, an electric freezer, an electric clothes-washing-and-drying unit, three electric radios and a large number of electric lamps.

Also an electric stereo system.

And an electric slide projector.

An electric toaster.

The electric train that Ted Bertle's parents had given him one boyhood Christmas was also in the house, as were Ted's electric saw and electric sander and Martha's electric vacuum cleaner.

It was not particularly surprising then that after Ted Bertle, on the occasion of their wedding anniversary, gave Martha an electric burglar alarm system for the house, electricians had to be called to deal with frequent power failures. Eventually they ran more lines into the house.

Thus strengthened for the long haul, the Bertles bought an electric dishwasher. On Father's Day, although Ted Bertle was not yet a father, Martha gave Ted an electric guitar, a sort of musical return for the electric organ Ted had given her on Mother's Day.

With the Fourth of July, Ted replied by giving Martha a pair of electric scissors and an electric sewing machine.

On the 5th of July, without knowing quite why, Martha countered by giving Ted an electric comb. On the 6th of July, Ted struck back by giving Martha an electric hair dryer.

For several days they were content simply to glare at each other, but in late July Martha surprised Ted one evening with an electric toothbrush.

Ted was silent for more than two weeks. Then, on Aug. 15, Napoleon's birthday, Ted surprised Martha with an electric griddle, an electric mixing bowl, an electric frying pan, an electric rotisserie-broiler, an electric coffee pot and an electric tray for keeping food warm on the sideboard.

Martha became sullen and uncommunicative. On Labor Day she gave Ted an electric blanket, but Ted, who had been expecting something like this, was ready for her.

He immediately retorted with an electric can opener, an electric food blender, an electric coffee grinder, an electric hot-dog cooking machine and a beautiful electric cut-glass decanter imported from Schenectady.

Martha stayed in her room, refusing to see anyone, until Veteran's Day when she surprised Ted with an electric radio-cassette-recorder-player, an electric typewriter, an electric shoe polisher and a bound volume of advertisements by their local electric company on the joy of "electric living."

That night the Bertles had a tender evening together. Martha brought out the electric candles she had secretly bought for herself and they played a game of electric football by electric candlelight.

On Thanksgiving Day, while carving the turkey with his electric knife, Ted Bertle was severely shocked by the electric wishbone, which had not been perfected yet and still had bugs in it. He was taken to the hospital and subjected to a long humiliating course of therapy before it was safe for anyone to touch him without wearing rubber gloves.

When Martha Bertle was admitted to the hospital for the birth of their first child, Ted was not allowed to visit the maternity ward because he still sizzled and crackled so loudly that it woke the other babies. For this reason, he did not learn until Martha came home that he had become the father of an electric son, who requires a change of fuses with each fresh diaper.

With what modern technology has learned about extension cords, the child's electrician assures the Bertles, there is no reason why he cannot live a perfectly normal life, provided he is careful not to get rained upon.

The happy Ted and Martha have already given him an electric teddy bear.

Hansel and Gretel would love it

Woodward's Gingerbread House Kit with 'extra' Decorations

Gingerbread House only one of "Edible Decorations"

We've got this dandy little gingerbread house kit that's fun to build and good to eat. The kit contains walls and roof (made of gingerbread of course), icing and 'Smarties' for decoration along with assembly instructions. We've taken extra candies (orange and lemon slices on the roof, striped mints on top and candy cane tops for a fence) to start your imagination rolling. The kids would get a kick out of building this too and would make a great "Christmas holiday" project. Also at our bakery counter you'll find great big, fat gingerbread cookies in the shape of trees, stockings, houses, bells and the age old gingerbread man all gussied up with colorful icing. Each has a hole through the top so you can hang them on the tree. Start thinking how you can use food as a festive decoration in centrepieces and ornaments and head for Woodward's where you'll find all the goodies to do it with.

"Quantity" Gifts can be "personal" and suit everyone

When you're faced with wanting to give gifts to employees, business associates, customers or to individuals or groups of people that you want to be "thoughtful" but must be somewhat "impersonal" . . . choose one from Woodward's Food Floor.

A fancy gift basket of exotic foods or prime fruit is an excellent choice. Then too, we have some really impressive cheese gift trays, individual fancy food packs like honey or jam; tins of British Biscuits, a turkey certificate or a Christmas Flower arrangement . . . all make great gifts (and you don't have to know sizes or colour preference). Come down to Woodward's this week and see for yourself what we have on the Food Floor for really different gift ideas.

Rejected Nominee Won't Appeal

A man who had his nomination papers for Saanich Peninsula School Board rejected Monday says he will not appeal the decision.

"I don't have a leg to stand on," Donald Grafton, of 4923 Townsend said Tuesday "It was my mistake, so appealing it would be a waste of time."

Grafton's nomination papers for the Dec. 9 election, which he filed Friday, were rejected by Saanich municipal clerk Gordon Hayward because his two nominators were not residents in the school district.

"It's very unfortunate," Hayward said, "but Saanich is in the very unique situation of being within two school districts.

"Grafton's nominators lived in the area covered by Victoria school board."

Grafton said he checked with the Public Schools Act and thought his nominators were qualified as long as they appeared on the voters' list.

"Hayward's staff checked to make sure they (his nominators) were on the voters' list when I filed them on Friday," Grafton said, "and they okayed them."

Hayward said he felt he warned Grafton of his error early enough Monday morning for him to re-file with new nominations, but Grafton said he wouldn't have made it in time.

Saanich is one of our municipalities which send representatives to Saanich Peninsula board.

Since no other nominations were filed for the seat, being vacated by Trustee John Pennington, the position will remain vacant until the new board meets in January.

Secretary-treasurer of the board, Gordon Blair, said there are provisions for the board to recommend to the minister of education an appointment to the position.

"This has happened three times in the last eight years," Blair said. "Normally the board will check with municipal councils or bring forward names of people they know for the position."

Grafton, who is a draftsman with B.C. Telephone Company and the father of two, said he is still interested in trying to get the position.

"I had talked to the school board and ran around all week trying to see if I could handle the job," he said.

"I'm just a novice," he added, "but I'd still like to get in there."

BARRETT TO MEET PM

Premier Barrett and Prime Minister Trudeau will meet in Ottawa Dec. 11, Barrett's office announced Tuesday.

A spokesman said "a number of issues" will be discussed by the two leaders.

Barrett and Trudeau held discussions on the Canada Assistance Plan when Trudeau visited Victoria in October but agreement on cost-sharing for B.C.'s new $200-a-month guaranteed income for the elderly was not reached at that meeting.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A man, who broke what his parole officer termed "a stringent curfew," was sentenced in provincial court Tuesday by Judge William Ostler to eight months' imprisonment for breaking and entering and theft.

Herbert Isadore Woods, 19, of 7761 Central Saanich Rd., had been released on parole Oct. 13 on condition that he abstain from alcohol, stay away from Victoria and obey a curfew.

On Nov. 1, Woods broke into a rooming house at 15 Lotus St., and stole $440 from the trouser pocket of a sleeping occupant in a second floor room.

"Alcohol would appear to be the main problem," said Woods' probation officer Neil Christopher Pearce, in requesting clemency.

"I'm sorry you're not more penitent," said Ostler, in sentencing the man.

A marijuana possession case, in which a policeman hailed a passing boat to retrive a baggy dropped into the water by the accused, ended Tuesday with the accused being placed on a six months' probationary term for possession of a narcotic.

Beaumong Charles Schultz, 22, of 3244 Eldon Place, was seen by police Sept. 3 sitting on the wharf edge with two male companions at a parking lot on Fort and Wharf.

As the police officer approached the accused, he was seen to drop a plastic bag over the wharf's edge. The officer hailed a small passing boat and retrieved the baggy.

In passing judgment, Ostler said he was now convinced that Schultz had actually handled the baggy and was familiar with the nature of cannabis.

Joseph Francois Louis-Paul Fortin, 29, of 225 Crest Motel, was placed on six months' probation for possession of a narcotic. Fortin was apprehended Nov. 21 in the 500 block Yates with cannabis resin hashish and a hashish pipe in his possession.

Bishop Flees From Attack Of African Bees

BELEM, Brazil (UPI) — African bees attacked and disrupted a weekend religious procession in a remote Amazon village, officials reported today, and stung the Roman Catholic bishop leading it.

Officials said Bishop Alquilio Alvares and several other persons were stung while marching in a procession honoring Our Lady of Nazareth. Several other persons were injured when they were trampled by worshippers fleeing the bees.

The attack occurred in the village of Soure, located near the mouth of the Amazon River.

Guide Fined $1,500

EDMONTON (CP) — Two men, one a licensed Alberta guide, were fined a total of $2,000 Tuesday on three charges under the Wildlife Act.

David Slutker of Edmonton and Thomas Montgomery Dye of Dallas, Tex., were found guilty of illegal possession of a grizzly bear.

During the two-day trial in provincial judge's court, Slutker also pleaded guilty to illegal possession of a black bear. A similar charge against Dye was dismissed by Carl H. Rolf, senior provincial judge.

"I conclude that they were most certainly opportunists in taking this grizzly bear," said Judge Rolf.

He levied the maximum sentence of $1,000 or six months in jail after being informed Slutker previously was convincted of illegal possession of the horns of a ram. He was fined $500 or three months on the charge involving the black bear.

Dye was sentenced to a fine of $500 or three months.

Slutker also was fined $50 or 10 days for illegal possession or an unregistered, restricted firearm.

Two wildlife officers testified they met the two men June 6 near the boundary of Jasper National Park. They said the men carried the hide and skull of a grizzly bear.

Slutker's wife, Barbara, earlier this yar was fined $125 for illegal possession of a black bear.

Annual Squabble

CALGARY (CP) — City council went through its annual squabble Monday before granting $5,000 to Calgary's Grey Cup parade committee.

It also picked the names of aldermen Don Hartman and Gordon Shrake out of a garbage can as council's delegates to the Canadian Football League east-west final in Hamilton, Dec. 3.

Aldermen voted 7 to 3 against reducing the contribution to $2,500.

Trains for Transit

EDMONTON (CP) — A rapid-transit system using electric trains that could cost up to $118.3 million has been proposed by a University of Alberta group studying the city's transportation problems.

The plan, outlined at a public hearing on the city's proposed transportation plan, incorporates six lines and 37 enclosed stations. Land, construction, stations, track and engineering would cost $87.9 million. Cost of rolling stock would vary between $23.4 million, if West German cars were used and $12.4 million for Canadian-built cars.

Cheers and Boos

REGINA (CP) — The Sasdatchewan Federation of Labor has commended the provincial government for recent labor legislation but condemned the unemployment situation.

In a 30-page brief to the government, the organization repeated requests for union representation on all government boards, commissions and agencies and not just those dealing with labor-oriented subjects.

Hostels Planned

EDMONTON (CP) — Two new youth hostels in the Edmonton area are planned as part of a program of broadening the network of hostels in northern Alberta, it was announced Monday.

Ellis Hammer, president of the Canadian Hostel Association's northwest region executive, said a hostel would be set up at a lakeside site near Edmonton. Another, expected to cost at least $300,000, is planned for the city.

Bicycle Firm Set

RIVERS, Man. (CP) — Frank Price, manager of the Oo-Za-We-Kwun native training centre here says agreement has been reached in principle to locate a bicycle manufacturing plant at this community about 30 miles northwest of Brandon.

Price said two Japanese firms, Sekine Industries Ltd. and Nagase Co., signed the agreement earlier this month with H. C. Paul Co. of Winnipeg, a division of Acklands Ltd., a Winnipeg industrial supply firm.

NATO, Warsaw Pact Countries Prepare for Security Talks

HELSINKI (Reuter) — Envoys of 34 countries began the laborious task today of preparing for a European security conference which has repeatedly been proposed by the Soviet Union.

The idea of a conference on security and co-operation in Europe originated in its present form with the Warsaw pact in the 1960s.

But NATO members withheld their agreement to hold preparatory discussions because the original Warsaw pact proposal excluded the United States and Canada from the conference. Moreover, NATO nations first wanted to see greater progress made over the Berlin problem and in other negotiations on East-West detente.

Only Albania, which is China's closest European ally, has refused to accept neutral Finland's invitation to the preparatory talks. The Albanians were reported to have said that real security in Europe could not be brought about through conferences organized by the two super powers—the United States and the Soviet Union.

Informed diplomatic sources said the task of the ambassadors at the preparatory talks will be to decide the site, timetable, official languages and agenda for the conference.

The sources said that Helsinki, Geneva and Vienna were in the running as sites for the conference but other capitals like Paris may also be considered.

The Warsaw pact countries would like the conference to agree on the building of a system of European security, including the creation of a system of obligations, providing a guarantee against any acts of aggression.

NATO AIMS DIFFER

They would also like a declaration of fundamental principles governing relations among states in Europe which would cover the inviolability of borders and the non-use of force to solve international disputes.

The Warsaw pact countries further want the conference to set up a standing body.

The NATO countries, however, would like the agenda item on political and security questions to include confidence-building measures. These could include prohibition of military manoeuvres on borders, advance notification of manoeuvres and exchanges of observers at military exercises.

The other agenda items that the NATO nations want include co-operation in economic, trading, technical and environmental fields and in cultural and human relations. They are interested to see the freer movement of peoples, ideas and information across the East-West dividing line in Europe.

If the preparatory talks in Helsinki result in an agenda, the conference on security and co-operation would open in June. Like the preparatory talks, it would bring together all the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization including Canada and Turkey, all the members of the Warsaw pact, and all other European nations except Albania.

Even the Vatican, Lichtenstein and San Marino are included.

The conference on security and co-operation is a companion to the conference on mutual reduction of forces which NATO and the Warsaw pact allies will hold early next year.

PUT-ON ARTIST CONFESSES ALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Mr. and Mrs. Alan Abel don't raise much cain. They live quietly on Manhattan's West Side. Occasionally, they notify television and newspaper assignment editors about something.

It is at this point things begin to stir. You may recall reading or seeing reports in 1964 and 1968 about the Best party's presidential candidate, Mrs. Yetta Bronstein, whose slogan was: "Put a Mother in the White House." Mrs. Bronstein really was Mrs. Abel.

In 1959, her husband, using his own name, stirred up much coverage of his vigorous campaign to cloth naked animals. He headed the Society for Indecency to Animals and appeared on many television talk shows.

Some 10 years later, his campaign still was puttering along. He appeared on The Merv Griffin Show and warned the audience: "A nude horse is a rude horse." Griffin knew it was a gag.

But a lot of people still don't, excluding assignments editors, here who live in mortal fear of the next move from the Abels.

Abel considers the naked animal coverup his best work: "I only had to have one little picture of a horse in Bermuda shorts and I could walk into any television show. They practically put me right on the air."

What started his life as a dedicated hoaxer?

"I originally was a performer and not getting anywhere. I found out that if you were a little eccentric or crazy you could attract attention. The society gave me a platform of sorts."

He has written a book about his efforts. It's called The Confessions of a Hoaxer.

Abel never has been pitted against a counterhoaxer during his appearances on scores of television talks shows around the U.S. He sees it as cause for genuine alarm, with all kidding aside.

"I wish more people would put me on or do funny things," said the master hoaxer. "But there aren't any people around who are really having any fun.

"We're living in a serious era."

French Drop Out

LENNOXVILLE, Que. (CP) — About 85 per cent of Quebec's English-speaking students choose an academic rather than a technical education after Grade 11, while only 60 per cent of French-speaking students choose further academic studies, a McGill University official said Tuesday.

Jane Morgan, the Montreal university's external affairs co-ordinator, presented the results of a research project to a symposium on English-speaking Quebec at Bishop's University here.

The number of English-speaking students in Quebec's schools has remained relatively stable in the past 10 years, although the number of English-speaking students completing Grade 11 has risen from 6,300 to 18,100, she said.

Lennoxville is about 75 miles southeast of Montreal.

Provincial Health Care Services 'Streamlined' in One Ministry

The NDP government Tuesday took a step towards bringing all health care facilities in the province under the jurisdiction of Health Minister Dennis Cocke.

In what was described as a streamlining measure by Cocke and Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall, the government has brought the administration of the Medical Services Act, which had formerly been administered by the provincial secretary, under Cocke's department.

In a press release, Hall said the move was being made "in the interests of efficiency in the over-all medical and medical insurance services." He said the government's position is to have "everything to do with health under one roof," part of "a proper over-all health system" for the province.

Among the health services administered by the provincial secretary are the Public Services Medical Plan Act, which deals with contributions and premiums paid by government employees, and the Medical Grant Act, which deals with contributions and premiums paid by specified income groups.

Hall said he finds it "inexplicable" why the Social Credit administration had these aspects of health service administered by the provincial secretary.

Cocke said it may have been because at one time all of the health services were handled by the provincial secretary and the duties transferred by the Tuesday move were all that was left over when the ministry of health was set up.

Cocke said he expects no major changes in programs as a result of the shift, only an increase in efficiency between himself and Geoff Stewart, the deputy minister responsible for the Medical Services Commission.

Stewart has been keeping Cocke aware of all the health business crossing Hall's desk, Hall said, so the changeover of jurisdiction should not be too dramatic.

Hall said the move could possibly require legislative approval, but is likely only a matter of approval by the cabinet.

TOUGHER MINING LAWS PROMISED BY MINISTER

FORT LANGLEY (CP) — Resources Minister Bob Williams says he is eager to discuss charges of irresponsible mining exploration in B.C.'s north and promised that tougher legislation could be expected.

Williams said he would be meeting with Mines Minister Leo Nimsick to discuss what legislation should be adopted to preserve the north.

"It is certainly our intention to adopt tougher legislation. I have pointed out in the past that I don't want this sort of thing to continue."

Williams was commenting on charges by two government wildlife biologists that mining exploration companies are recklessly gouging mountainsides and uplands over a wide area of northwestern B.C.

Biologists Fred Harper, of Fort St. John, and Ken Sumanik, of Prince George, said Friday the use of bulldozers and hydraulic sluicing methods was causing environmental damage in the Stikine and Dease River watersheds and in an area all across the northern section of the province, from the coast mountains to the Rocky Mountain Trench.

Thomas Elliott, manager of the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines, said Monday the biologists' charges were "absolutely false."

Williams said he was particularly concerned about the practice of hydraulic sluicing used in mining exploration.

52 BILLION HOME-GROWN CIGARETTES

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians will smoke about 52 billion home-grown cigarettes this year and 620 million cigars, federal agriculture department officials said Tuesday.

In a paper to the Canadian agricultural outlook conference, C. H. Jefferson of the department's plant products division and R. T. Miller of its economics branch say sales of cigarettes this year will rise about two per cent from 1971. And a similar increase appears likely for 1973.

Tobacco prices to growers rose this year to about 70 cents a pound, well up from the 64.83 cents a pound in 1973.

"In view of this year's weather-reduced production of flue-cured tobacco, a somewhat larger crop is warranted in 1973," he said.

Foreign Finances Welcome

LONDON (CP) — Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick told a meeting of businessmen today that curtailing or rigidly controlling foreign investment in Canada "could be disastrous."

"We in New Brunswick not only do not fear foreign investment, we welcome it," Hatfield said.

He told a meeting of the Canada-United Kingdom Chamber of Commerce that welcoming foreign investment "is the position of the government of New Brunswick—and polls and public opinion surveys have indicated it is the position of by far the larger number of our people."

"We in New Brunswick cannot afford to indulge in narrow, outmoded and self-defeating forms of nationalism," the premier said.

"We must go beyond our traditional role as a supplier of raw materials. We must diversify our industrial base."

He also cited a need to "process more of our raw materials at home."

"We must develop secondary industries."

N.B. NOT DEVELOPED

Hatfield conceded that New Brunswick, because of various worldwide factors, now is "among the most underdeveloped provinces in Canada."

"We have been forced to depend far too much on our natural resources, principally our forests, while there has been woefully insufficient development of the secondary industries needed to provide the maximum level of year-round employment for our labor force."

Booby-Trap Bicycle Explodes

BEAURECEUIL, France (Reuter) — An explosion Tuesday rocked the ruins of the booby-trapped home of miner Jean Pica where six persons have already died.

Pica, an explosives expert, blew himself up Nov. 10 after shooting and wounding the local mayor, whom he partly blamed for an eviction order against him.

When the house owner and police went to break into Pica's house they set off a blast and the house collapsed, killing five persons.

Tuesday's explosion was caused by a dynamite charge fixed to Pica's bicycle. Two days ago a stick of dynamite blew up as firemen searched the debris of the house. No one was hurt in either blast.

An explosives expert was killed last Thursday in another booby-trap blast.

Firemen sifting the remains of the house now are using a 50-foot shovel mounted on a crane.

Everybody talks about traction.

But Firestone guarantees it.

Traction is what you want from a traction tire. So no wonder everybody promises you'll get plenty. But have you noticed? Others give you a promise and a handshake.
But you'll get a lot more at Firestone.
We guarantee you'll go . . . or we'll pay the tow.
That's right. If you get stuck through loss of traction, we'll pay up to $7 for a tow truck to get you on your way.
Maybe there's a lesson there.
Maybe the other tire people won't give you the same guarantee for a reason. Maybe they're not quite so sure of their traction.

If you get stuck through loss of traction, we'll pay up to $7 for a tow truck to get you on your way. Ask for all the details on this surprising guarantee that covers all Firestone snow tires.
But at Firestone, we know what our snow tires will do. (We've been offering this guarantee for years. And we're not bankrupt yet.)
Now there's a very big difference in our famous traction guarantee.
Now it covers every Firestone snow tire. Even the "Town & Country" Retread at only $14.88 installed.
So if you want traction (and what motorist doesn't?) why not get guaranteed traction? Especially since our prices are so low.

Traders

Traders Group Ltd. reports consolidated net income for the first nine months this year of $7,935,000 or $1.52 a share, up from $5,689,000 and $1.07 in the corresponding period last year.

Traders' insurance subsidiaries, Canadian general insurance group, had a nine-month income contribution of $990,000 compared with a loss of $55,000 in 1971.

GPI

Great Pacific Indistries Ltd. has purchased 270,024 shares of Neonex International Ltd. from Jim Pattison Enterprises Ltd.

The Vancouver-based public company now increases its holdings in Neonex to 1,122,424 shares, approximately 16 per cent of the outstanding Neonex common shares.

Purchase price was not given, but at Friday's closing price of $4.75, the transaction would be valued at $1,282,614.

ATCO

The earnings of ATCO Industries Ltd., increased to $1,285,000 or 50 cents a share for the six months ended Sept. 30.

This compares with net income of $1,103,000 or 43 cents a share during the same period last year.

Gross income for the six-month period was $35,636,000, up from $25,143,000.

Western Decalta

Western Decalta Petroleum Ltd. earned $1,614,000 or 19.7 cents a share during the first nine months this year.

This compares with $1,033,000 or 14.5 cents a share for the same period last year.

The 1972 nine-month earnings per share reflected an increase in the average outstanding shares of 14.9 per cent.

Walt Disney

Walt Disney Productions reports the fiscal year ended Sept. 30 was the best in the company's history, with earnings increasing 51 per cent to $40.3 million or $2.90 a share.

Net income for the 1971 fiscal year was $26.72 million or $2.03 a share.

Disney reports that revenues for fiscal 1972 rose 90 per cent to $328.8 million, compared with $175.61 million in 1971.

The company also said that it had a record fourth quarter, with earnings rising 51 per cent to $15.6 million or $1.11 a share.

For the second period last year, net was $10.35 million or .77 a share. Revenues for the quarter ended Sept. 30 were $108.8 million, compared with $57.2 million a year earlier.

Bank Of B.C. Profit Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Bank of British Columbia reported Tuesday its balance of revenue declined 12.9 per cent to $804,545 for the fiscal year ended Oct. 31, compared with $924,145 a year earlier.

After an arbitrary appropriation for losses and provision for income taxes, the balance of profits for the year was $304,545, an increase of 51.4 per cent from 1971.

Appropriation for losses was $240,000 compared with $540,000 and provision for income taxes was $260,000 compared with $183,000 last year.

Dividends paid during the year totalled $102,111, compared with last year's $151,056.

Total assets rose 36.9 per cent to $244,175,618, reflecting large increases in cash resources and loans.

NW Sports Earnings Off

VANCOUVER (CP) — Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd., owner of the Vancouver Canucks, reported Tuesday net 1972 earnings before extraordinary items dropped to $494,091 or 49 cents a share, compared with 1971 earnings of $610,720 or 67 cents a share.

With extraordinary items, net earnings in 1972 rose to $1.1 million or $1.10 a share. There were no extraordinary items in 1971.

The extraordinary items in 1972 resulted from National Hockey league expansion in Long Island, N.Y. and Atlanta, Ga.

Northwest president Thomas K. Scallen said that "operating losses for minor league franchises in Seattle and Rochester resulted in the decrease in net profits before extraordinary items for the year."

AWAIT RULING

"It is important to note that the Vancouver Hockey Club Ltd., a wholly-owned subsidiary, has not yet received a final ruling from the department of national revenue on the deductibility for income tax purposes on amounts spent to purchase player contracts at the National Hockey League expansion draft in June of 1970," Scallen said.

"This company has made full provision for income taxes against its earnings for the year ended June 30, 1972. However, in management's opinion, a favorable ruling is expected which will result in a deduction or elimination of current liability for income taxes of that company."

Total revenue rose to $5.2 million in 1972, compared to $4.9 million in 1971. Total expenses rose to $4 million, compared to $3.6 million in 1971.

Wage Controls Inevitable

By Al Forrest
Times Business Editor

A growing number of merchants and economists are coming to he conclusion that wage and price controls in Canada are inevitable within the next six months.

Public discussion has gone beyond whether the controls are desirable and effective. Now the comments all have a tone of resignation and the discussion is merely an explanation of why they are inevitable.

For example:

● Dr. E. W. Clendenning, in a study for Richardson Securities today concludes wage and price controls are inevitable for both political and economic reasons.

● Canadian Business Service of Toronto today issued a report saying "There is now a real chance that some form of wage-price controls will be introduced within six months."

● In Victoria last week Daniel Sprague, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said controls are likely because of the political deadlock at Ottawa — the Liberal government is in no position to resist the pressure from the Conservatives and New Democratic Party.

● Today in Ottawa, an executive committee of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is considering whether to support a Victoria chamber resolution urging wage and price controls.

PART OF A TREND

Canadian Business Service sees controls coming as part of an international trend. Both the United States and Britian have slapped restrictions on cost increases.

Dr. Clendenning sees economic pressures as well as political pressures working on the Liberal government.

He foresees reductions in personal income taxes.

He says: "This, of course, will result in a considerably more expansionary fiscal stance in 1973 — assuming passage of the May budget proposals — and a shift away from the trend towards a more neutral policy stance that appeared to be developing before the election.

EXPANSION

"How great this shift towards expansion will be remains to be seen but it does mean that economic policies will probably be aimed in an expansionary direction throughout 1973."

He says the government is left with little choice but to impose a system of price and wage controls.

He adds: "The effectiveness of a control system that is imposed when prices are already rising and aggregate demand policies are becoming more expansionary is another matter of great uncertainty.

"Under these conditions the only type of price and wage controls that would be at all effective would be a relatively rigid legislated system that would hopefully convince people that strong measures were being taken and thereby reduce inflationary expectations.

"Even this would probably be a short-run impact unless solid evidence of success was soon apparent."

He predicts the net growth rate in 1973 will be in the vicinity of 6 per cent with the federal government stimulating consumer spending, construction and business investment.

"The greatest uncertainty in the outlook for 1973 is the rate of inflation. Even before the prospect of additional fiscal expansion, the GNP price deflator appeared to be headed for a rise of about 4.5 per cent in 1973," Dr. Clendenning said.

"Whether or not this figure will be better or worse probably depends almost entirely on whether or not an effective price and wage control system is imposed during 1973.

"At this point it seems that the people will be fortunate if the rate of price increase can be kept to the 4.5 per cent level next year even with price and wage controls.

"For 1974 the rate of inflation is likely to move higher again—unless a rigid freeze is imposed — if aggregate demand policies remain expansionary throughout 1973."

The Volvo 164E Now comes with a computer brain!

When you get our beautiful new Volvo 164E (with Electronic fuel injection) you get no carburetors. Instead, a computer "brain" automatically adjusts fuel mixture to the engine's needs. So at idle it wastes not. And at speed it wants not. At heart, of course, it's a Volvo. So the 164E you buy from us is built to outlast other cars, as well as outsmart them.
It used to take brains to BUY a Volvo
Now it takes brains to BE a Volvo
NOTE: We have one only brand new 1972 Volvo 164E left in stock. This could be your opportunity to move up to a Fuel Injection Volvo at a great saving!

STOL Production Next Year

TORONTO (CP) — De Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. has announced it will begin its marketing program for the DHC-7 short takeoff and landing (STOL) airliner by the end of the month and expects it to be in full swing in the new year.

Robert McIntyre, the company's marketing development director, said in an interview Tuesday that carriers now flying the company's successful Twin Otter in commuter and feeder line operations, especially in the United States, will be the first target.

Preparations are under way at the Toronto plant to begin cutting first metal for the two prototypes to be built with the support of the federal government which announced an $80 million program before the Oct. 30 federal election.

The aircraft, completely designed in Canada, will use four PT6 turbine engines manufactured by United Aircraft of Canada Ltd. in Montreal.

The DHC-7 is destined to operate from special 2,000-foot runways with a 48-passenger load over distances ranging up to 450 miles.

The company refers to it as the quiet airliner because of its low noise level.

De Havilland will market the aircraft jointly with the Boeing Co. of Seattle, whose sales and technological expertise will be combined with de Havilland's knowledge in the short takeoff and landing field.

McIntyre said Boeing will not participate in the manufacture of the aircraft. It wants to help guarantee the plane's success to pave the way for the establishment of jet STOL operations in the early 1980s from 2,000-foot runways.

McIntyre said about 50 orders for the STOL aircraft would be required to justify production.

MONITOR FINANCES

NEW YORK (AP) — The American Stock Exchange announced plans Tuesday for a computerized system to monitor the financial condition of Amex-listed companies.

Paul Kolton, chairman of the exchange, said the system would aid companies in detecting emerging financial problems and "where necessary, prompt faster disclosure of changing conditions to the investing public."

James Walker, an exchange vice-president, said annual and quarterly reports would be the chief source of raw material.

Statements for the last four years would be combed for 16 key items, he said.

From these items, a dozen ratios would be computed, including the ratios of cash to current liabilities; current assets to liabilities; long-term debt to net worth; sales to total assets; cost of goods sold to total sales; and net income to net worth.

For each ratio, the exchange will have an acceptable range which will vary according to the industry of which the company is a part.

The program will cover some 1,300 companies and is to be started early next year.

Payment Hold Pushes Firm Into Bankruptcy

LONDON (CP) — One of Ontario's largest general contractors filed bankruptcy papers with the company's president placing the blame for his firm's failure on the Ontario government.

W. A. McDougall of London's W. A. McDougall Ltd., said Tuesday that the provincial government refused to release a $1.4 million holdback payment to the company for work done on a $23 million sewage treatment plant in Hamilton.

He said the money was to be released on certain conditions, and would have been enough for the company to remain solvent.

James Auld, Ontario minister of environment, whose office is in charge of the treatment plant, denied McDougall's charges, but would not pinpoint the sum being held back or reasons for doing so.

The company president said the trouble started when the firm felt that a subcontractor, Durall Construction Ltd. of Winnipeg, would not be able to complete its portion of the project.

The McDougall financial backers, Aetna Casualty Co. of Canada, said they would withdraw financial support of the company unless the government agreed to certain proposals, including the termination of Durall's contract and the go-ahead for McDougall to finish the project, including Durall's portion.

LAWYERS OPPOSED

Auld said government lawyers advised against accepting the proposals because "we were afraid a lot of people would be left out in the cold."

The environment minister said he did not want to see "a lot of little guys" mistreated because of legal technicalities.

In Winnipeg, Durall president Frank Burstein said his company was capable of completing its contract but that "Aetna has been endeavoring to erode our share of the payment."

Auld said the Hamilton project, almost complete, will be finished next summer and "the next move as far as we're concerned is to notify the bonding company Aetna to carry out the terms of the bond."

He said the primary objective is to get the job completed, then see that Ontario does not end up paying bills it doesn't owe, and that all who have legitimate claims get paid.

Rouyn Studies Takeover Bids

TORONTO (CP) — R. D. Armstrong, president of Anglo-Rouyn Mines Ltd., told a shareholders' meeting negotiations are under way with several bidders wishing to make a takeover bid for all Anglo-Rouyn shares.

The meeting was adjourned until Dec. 16 to enable negotiations to be completed. If negotiations were not completed by then, the company would proceed with liquidation.

More Balanced Investment Urged

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Canada needs a more balanced investment to develop its own manufacturing and service industries, Andrew Kniewasser of Toronto, president of the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada (IDA), said Tuesday.

Here to meet with local IDA members, Kniewasser said investors "should take more risks in Canada" but at the same time Canada "shouldn't become a closed economy" since it has to live on an international level.

Gold River On Main List

OVERSIGHT OPENS SEAT

CHILLIWACK (CP) — An oversight on the part of Chilliwack school board chairman Dr. Norman Crabtree has left him out of the running in the December Municipal election.

Crabtree, whose term expired this year, thought the deadline for filing nominations was Nov. 27 and failed to file his nomination papers before Monday's deadline. This leaves the seat open with no one contesting it.

b.c. briefs

Sports Car Demolished

BURNABY (CP) — Kenneth Lloyd Roberts, 19, of San Francisco, was sentenced to 14 days after pleading guilty to possession of stolen property — a $13,000 sports car which was demolished in a high-speed chase Sept. 13.

Roberts was also given a $300 fine or a concurrent 14-day sentence on a charge of dangerous driving and a $100 fine or 10 days on a charge of failing to complete a proper customs report when entering Canada.

The charges were laid after a car went through the Rooseville border crossing without stopping, then led RCMP cars in a chase that saw the pursued car reach speeds up to 140 miles an hour.

The chase ended when the car overturned near Fernie.

Elk Transplanted to B.C.

LYTTON (CP) — Brian Gates, lower mainland wildlife officer for the British Columbia fish and wildlife branch, said 40 transplanted elk will be released near a stream four miles south of here. The elk are to arrive this week by cattleliner from Jasper national Park where there is an overpopulation of elk.

Five-Year Plan Goes to Vote

SURREY (CP) — Surrey Municipal council has approved an $8-million five-year plan to improve the district's roads. Mayor William Vander Zalm said a borrowing bylaw for $5 million to finance the plan will be put before the voters Dec. 9.

School Bus Sabotage Probed

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Police are investigating four instances of sabotage of the Logan Lake school bus, which carries students to school in this community about 25 miles notheast of Logan Lake. Police said Tuesday the attacks have included driving nails into tires, pinching the gas line, removing the fuel tank drain plug, ripping ignition wires from spark plugs, cutting the radiator hose and the main battery cable and ripping out the heating and wiring systems.

City College Budget

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver City College budget for 1973-1974 calls for total spending of $13,776,608. This represents an increase of $2,278,118 in gross operating costs over the 1972-1973 year. The college council says the increase is due to higher salaries, increased costs of goods and services, higher enrolment and special items such as new campus planning.

. . . And Also at Capilano

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The Capilano College governing council has approved a provisional 1973-74 budget of $2.75 million, about $906,000 more than it is authorized to spend in the 1972-73 year. A spokesman said the main reason for the increase is anticipated cost of opening new facilities.

DUCKS TURN MEAN BECAUSE OF STRIKE

SACRAMENTO, CALIF. (UPI) — The ducks at McKinley Park aren't getting their daily bread because of a bakers' strike — and they're snapping mad.

"They chased me and my little two-year-old newphew back to the car," said Parkgoer Jill Demmel of Sacramento. "I kept throwing what bread I had left at them so they wouldn't attack us.

"It's getting dangerous. Those ducks are starving. They don't know a bread strike is on."

The ducks are usually fed by park visitors, but a two-week-old bakers' walkout has apparently cut down their food supplies.

Park superintendent Gene Robinson promised to rush some emergency food to the ducks. "We certainly don't want them chasing people out of the park," he said.

How I Met Dow Jones And Other Wise Men

"No one is an innocent in the stock market," said Premier Dave Barrett the other day when asked to allay the fears of investors in the shares of B.C. Telephone. On another occasion he told a press conference of financial editors, who are said to have paled visibly, that participation in the stock market was "just like playing the ponies."

Heaven forbid that I should disagree with the premier, who is off to a good start in other ways, but on this particular matter he happens to be wrong on both counts.

There is an innocent in the stock market. Me. Or I, as the case may be. And the market is not just like playing the ponies, Mr. Barrett, not just like it at all. It is the most mysterious, baffling, aggravating and humiliating game the cunning human brain has yet devised.

I would come right out and give the name of the company in which I hold shares, but that might cause it to go into another familiar downward swoop. That is one thing I've learned. Any event, global or local, acts as a personal blow to my shares. If your wife's brother gets a head cold my stock will hear about it and go into a decline.

I have had these shares now for about eight years. They were given to me, free, gratis, by a newspaper publisher for whom I'd worked and with whom I'd fought 20 long, happy years. I accepted them as a token of his gratitude. He wouldn't have it that way. "The one sure way to turn a socialist into a capitalist is to put him in the market," he said, radiating evil. "I've finally found a way of making you one of us."

I doubted that. The shares then were unlisted. They had a theoretical par value of 50 cents each. Then, about a year later, when I was abroad, the stock was listed on the industrial board of the Vancouver Stock Exchange at $19 a share. I felt a strange sensation that seeped into every fiber of my being. It was greed, naked greed.

★ ★ ★

It was greed, too — and a little bird's tip that the stock would go to $100 a share before Christmas—that kept me from selling and re-joining the saner side of society. That, as I say, was eight years ago. Today, at noon, the stock is offered at $1.60 a share. So much for that.

It wasn't until I'd settled down in Victoria and spent the occasional lunch hour in the board room of a certain brokerage firm that I came to think of the stock market as an enormous crap game.

There's a regular company of noon-hour experts who gather there, mostly elderly. They watch the fluctuating prices much as they'd watch the ducks on Beacon Hill Park's Goodacre Lake, but every one of them is owl-wise in the mysterious ways of the market and perfectly willing — eager, indeed — to educate the innocent.

Until I joined this group I was an avid reader of the annual and special reports of the corporation in which I have this eensy vested interest. Fool that I was I fancied that if "we" showed a little profit my shares would automatically go up. I was that dumb.

Now I know that some decision in Hanoi or a casual remark by a statesman in Cairo or a snowstorm in New York can have just as traumatic effect on my fiscal fortunes as any profit-or-loss statement. My little share certificate is like the last domino that will fall if any other domino anywhere in the world is so much as nudged. Or, to switch metaphors, it is a piece of Kleenex blowing in the winds of a windy world.

When my stock took one of its periodic dips immmediately after the federal election it was in no way surprising to the old board room codgers who simply shook their heads and told me, "Minority government, you understand. Always dislocates the market."

★ ★ ★

From this I naturally assumed that the subsequent triumph at the polls of Richard Milhous Nixon, would bring the roses to the cheeks of my shares. But, no. "The New York market had already compensated for the Nixon win in anticipation," I was told in a tone of voice that wondered where I might have been.

New York, in fact, is always on the minds of my board room advisors. There was almost a party mood last week, for instance, when the Dow Jones Industrial Average, an indicator made up of 30 blue chip stocks on the New York exchange, climbed over the 1000-mark.

As New York goes, I was told, so goes Toronto. As Toronto goes so goes Vancouver. How come, then, that my own shares marked this happy occasion by dropping a nickle? "There are always exceptions that prove the rule," my advisor replied, smiling a Mona Lisa smile.

Peace, itself, is on the minds of them all. Boy, you just never saw so many peace-lovers! Day after day, I'm told, there's an exchange of the latest news from Paris, Washington, Hanoi and Saigon. "Will the carnage never stop?" I heard one sweet, white-haired man cry one noon-hour, scanning the mining board. "How can the intermediate and longer term outlook improve until it does?"

Well, as I say, it's all been an eye-opener to me and I must say I've nothing but envy for the premier. I wish I was an innocent again and just played the ponies. The stock market is playing me and that's not half as much fun.

Mushroom Experiments Lead to Final 'Trip'

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

People who experiment in the "mind-expanding" qualities of a common B.C. mushroom are taking their lives in their own hands, provincial botanist Adam Szczawinski warned today.

The mushroom is the Fly Agaric — otherwise know as the sacred mushroom.

Known since ancient times for its hallucinating and inebriating properties, it grows in the Greater Victoria area and elsewhere on Vancouver Island.

It is scientifically called Amanita Muscaria and is listed in mushroom books as poisonous.

Szczawinski is concerned at the growing interest of drug-oriented people in the mushroom.

"Anyone who experiments with this mushroom is mad," he said. "we don't know yet what after-effects it has on the body and brain. An overdose can be deadly. It's no mushroom to play around with unless taken under medical supervision.

The mushroom is about 12 inches wide. It is brilliant scarlet or orange and covered with creamy warts.

That the Fly Agaric is a hallucinogenic mushroom and capable of taking a person "on a trip" has been known for at least 4,000 years. According to ancient writings those who ate or drank its juice got a feeling of elation or ecstasy — so powerful that they felt they were sharing the life of immortals.

★

It was used by magicians to make proppecies. In Siberia the mushroom seems to have been eaten to get drunk.

Today some of the mushroom's alkaloids are being used in tranquillizers.

Szczawinski said other poisonous mushrooms are found on Vancouver Island during this season and should be avoided.

(Greater Victoria hospital's report no serious poisoning cases but said about 12 persons who felt sick after eating mushrooms had their stomach pumped out as a precautionary measure.)

The Panther Agaric, also a member of the Amanita family, was one of them, he said. It is also hallucinogenic. It is pale yellowish-brown or dark brown and covered by whitish warts.

He said the dread Amanita Phalloides, sometimes called the "death cap," has been reported in British Columbia but has not yet been identified scientifically. The mushroom has killed three persons in the last two weeks in California.

"It is an eastern mushroom which has spread to California and now appears to be moving northward," he said. "A few years ago one was found near Seattle."

The mushroom grows to a height of 14 inches and has a distinctive brassy green color on its top, he said. It seems to favor the moist humus of hillside oak forests.

"Just a tiny bit of this mushroom, let's say the size of your fingernail, is enough to kill you," he said. "If you ever pick one up, you should wash your hands after.

"It is possible that there could be a sporadic occurrence of this species in British Columbia," he added. "The best defence against poisonous mushrooms is to pick only those you know or can identify."

★

Szczawinski said Vancouver Island is one the province's most prolific mushroom gardens where half of the North American species can be found in the woods, fields and backyards.

There are many excellent species, he said, and it doesn't take much training to become familiar with them and to recognize them on sight.

He listed a few unmistakable ones that are safe, such as Shaggy Mane, Oyster and Cauliflower mushroom.

He said the number of poisonous species is small compared to the total number of mushrooms.

It also has often happened that what a person has assumed to be mushroom poisoning was just a combination of things, such as eating too much, he said.

He said fear of suspected poisoning can also make a person feel sick.

"If a person starts worrying, he may bring on real symptoms and ill effects," he explained. "But no case of suspected mushroom poisoning should be treated lightly. See your physician."

Major Land Purchase Approved

Saanich Puts Up $223,350 for Future Housing, Beautification and Parks

Panama Flats—part of plan to save Colquitz

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Land acquisitions totalling $223,350 have been approved by Saanich council for future housing, beautification and park projects at four locations in the south-central sector of the municipality.

Two-thirds of the cost will go to secure 38 acres in the Roy Road-Panama Flats area as a nucleus for preservation of open space and a land bank for housing, lands and housing chairman Ald. Edith Gunning explained today.

Council action is the result of some two years of planning and negotiations by land department staff.

"We had to work in secret because people have been asking such high prices for land" with development of the Saanich sewer enterprise area, the alderman said.

Options have been taken by Saanich for the initial 38 acres with a value of about $147,000.

Funds are expected to be borrowed in accordance with special legislation granted Saanich for Colquitz River preservation. Up to $1 million may be borrowed for this purpose, said administrator John Tribe.

With participation of federal and provincial governments funds could be borrowed temporarily until suitable parcels of the acreage could be sold for housing.

Mrs. Gunning said the action was aimed at not only preservation of an agricultural open area on the Colquitz flood plain — Panama Flats — but stabilization of the land market and provision of attractive housing sites on the part not subject to flooding.

Bank to Curb Speculation

Council's position is supported by a study completed last summer by University of B.C. researchers and financed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. It confirmed the use of municipal land banks as a control on the speculative land market.

Mrs. Gunning said land sales could be both for individual, single family development or "perhaps some cluster housing."

Under the National Housing Act the purchase of land by an individual may represent down payment on the cost of constructing a house, which for many people is the only way mortgage funds may be secured.

Mrs. Gunning said it is not intended to stir false hopes of sewer expansion in the minds of land owners in that area, nor among prospective land owners.

The next area slated for sewer expansion is Royal Oak where Broadmead is developing a satellite community.

Sewer expansion, the alderman noted, must meet criteria for the public good and not be based on individual needs or requests.

Most of the Colquitz land involved will remain in agricultural use, but eventually, with future acquisitions the proportion of farmland and green space to housing land could decline.

Second largest amount aproved for land purchases is $39,750 for several parcels at Rutledge and Cloverdale to make about two acres available for a community park-play area in a district which needs such space "desperately," according to assistant planner Gil Laurenson.

A former playground in that neighborhood was incorporated in Scotia Green community housing project, about a block east of the proposed park. Rutledge could be closed to traffic access at Cloverdale.

Three properties worth $29,400 will be acquired on the Gorge between Gorge View and Tillicum bridge for unspecified future waterway improvement.

Finally, parts of private property at the north end of the former McRae estate — now Cedar Hill Park — will be secured for $7,200 to preserve Queensbury Pond as a wildlife sancuary.

Displacement of Workers Holds Up Sandringham Pact

Nearly all the issues in the Sandringham Private Hospital strike have been resolved, co-owner Russell Shepherd said today.

But one important issue remains, he added — the returning to work of the strikers and the resulting displacement of those hired to take their places.

Alex Markides, staff representative for the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said as far as he understands "everything is agreed to except signatures and dates on a return to work."

He declined comment on Shepherd's remarks except to say the union is awaiting his signature on the new contract.

But it is another document, a return to work agreement, which has yet to be resolved before the end may be in sight for Victoria's longest-ever strike, nearly 26 months old.

And, hanging in the background, is a question mark over private hospital costs and the future of private hospital care in British Columbia.

Sandringham and CUPE Local 1311 have held three negotiating meetings — the last Nov. 10 — since Labor Minister Bill King persuaded hospital management to meet the union. The talks were the first since before the strike began Sept. 30, 1970.

"Ninety-five per cent of the clauses we have worked out and are acceptable," Shepherd said today.

He received a copy of the agreement Tuesday — but said it is not ready to be signed.

"I am trying to resolve a method we can live with to work the people back in," he said.

"At this moment I have not worked out the method and I have no intention of dismissing 24 people overnight. That is the stumbling block."

Shepherd said that "possibly" he will be meeting the union next week, but not until he has met Health Minister Dennis Cocke.

He said he wants to discuss with Cocke private hospital costs, including the ultimate effect of the minimum wage when it reaches $2.50 an hour in the summer of 1974, and the whole future of private hospital care of the elderly under the new government.

Ministers in the New Democratic Party government have repeated a philosophy that they are not in favor of profit-making in the health care field. But private hospitals with problems because of the minimum wage increase can apply to the government for a subsidy.

There has been speculation that the government will raise rates paid to private hospitals for care of those on welfare.

The Sandringham strikers had originally sought a wage scale ranging from the old $1.50 an hour minimum wage to $2 an hour. But the bigger issue has been job security and the protection of a union contract.

FIRE VICTIM DIES

A 37-year-old Esquimalt man, who suffered burns Nov. 16 when a $20,000 fire destroyed a home at 1225 Juno, died Tuesday in Victoria General Hospital.

Gordon Scott was the last of 10 persons to escape the fire. He threw himself from a ground floor window with his clothing ablaze.

His brother, Edward Scott, 31, three other adults and five children escaped with minor injuries.

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre said an inquiry will be held.

Firefighters Voting On New Contract Today

City firefighters were to vote on a new contract with Victoria this afternoon.

Fred (Whitey) Severson, president of Local 730 of the International Association of Firefighters, said this morning he is confident of membership ratification.

He declined to release details of the proposed new contract until after they have been given to and voted on by the members, except to say "the wage package is reasonable."

City council is expected to make its decision at a meeting Thursday.

'Mickey Mouse' Beacons Slammed

Modern rescue beacons in airplanes are "Mickey Mouse affairs that are inneffective and inadequate," a local pilot said today.

Roy Parrett, former B.C. director of the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association and former president of the association's local branch, said four persons missing in a twin-engine Beechcraft in the Arctic since Nov. 8 would have a better chance of rescue if the plane had a strong rescue beacon.

Most modern beacons have only one-tenth of a watt power, and are powered by pen light cells, Parrett said.

Pilots were better off with the old Search and Rescue and Homing (SARAH) rescue beacons made by the armed forces that were used until a few years ago, Parrett said. The large SARAH beacon had a 15-watt power so would last a lot longer, he said.

"It was almost indestructible," Parrett said "You could put it in a refrigerator or in the blazing sun, pound it with a hammer or drop it on the floor, and it still worked," he said.

Parrett is angered by the fact that there are no government standards regulating rescue beacons for planes.

"What we really need is a 1972 SARAH," he said.

PARRETT
. . . SARAH fan

The pen light cells that power modern beacons are "very ineffective" in freezing temperatures, he said.

Parrett said he brought the problem before the spring meeting of the Canadian owners and pilots association, but got no support. People thought he was criticizing beacons in general, he said.

"I'm not really against beacons but I'm against Mickey Mouse beacons," he explained.

Parrett said the commercially-made beacons will last only eight hours whereas the armed forces SARAH last for days if a plane is down in the bush.

However, a spokesman for the Rescue Co-ordinating Centre here said most modern beacons will last for 48 hours in 40 degree below zero weather.

The SARAH was bigger and more cumbersome than modern beacons, he said, because it used large expensive batteries. Also, it had no equipment to turn it on automatically if passengers were incapacitated in a crash, said the spokesman.

Because the government does not set standards for rescue beacons, the department of transport has prepared a list of approved beacons, he said.

FRIDGE DEATH SPARKS PROBE

An investigation into hazardous consumer products was ordered by Attorney-General Alex MacDonald today, following the death Monday of an Esquimalt boy in an abandoned refrigerator.

"The attorney-general is very concerned about hazardous products, especially after this tragic death," MacDonald's executive secretary Adrian Wong said.

"He has asked the consumer affairs department to investigate the problem and to look at protective legislation in other provinces, especially in Ontario."

Wong said he didn't know if it was possible to make specific legislation on the problem of refrigerators, but said the consumer affairs branch is investigating this possibility.

MacDonald has ordered a report to be made as quickly as possible, Wong said.

No Different on Road —Cats Don't Know It

"There really isn't any great difference between playing at home or on the road," Victoria Cougar coach Mitch Pechet declared early in the Western Canada Hockey League season.

His charges, however, are performing as if there is a difference.

The Cougars suffered a 9-0 humiliation Tuesday night in Saskatoon. Regina Pats handed Victoria an 8-2 beating Monday as the Cougars opened a six-game Prairie swing.

Victoria's travels take the club to Winnipeg tonight and Pechet undoubtedly will place great emphasis on defensive hockey. It just hasn't been there in Victoria's first two starts on the Prairies.

And Pechet may make his views on road travel known to his players in hopes of giving them some psychological help.

"In the old days, there was a definite advantage to playing at home," he said in an earlier interview. "Homer refereeing was prevalent. In addition, the differences in some rinks were as obvious as night and day, especially in size and lighting.

"Today, there is standardization in size, lighting and, yes, even officiating."

The differences that existed Tuesday were strictly between Saskatoon's Blades and the Cougars. The Blades, running their unbeaten streak to eight games, were sharp. The Cougars, playing their third game in four days, weren't.

Pechet regarded the outing as "our flattest performance of the year."

The Blades jumped into a 2-0 lead after the first period, then turned the game into a rout by pumping in five goals in the first six minutes of the second.

Blades peppered 57 shots at an overworked Sam Clegg while Cougars managed only 17 drives at Ed Humphrey.

Cougars played without defenceman Cal Kitching, who suffered a break in a small wrist bone in Monday's game in Regina.

Dennis Abgrall scored two goals and set up a third. Seven other players contributed a goal apiece and, the Jack McLeod-coached Blades showed a well-balanced attack before 2,083 fans.

The loss left Cougars sharing the Western Division basement with Vancouver Nats, who suffered a 9-2 beating at the hands of Swift Current Broncos.

Elsewhere, a late goal by Jerry Holland with his club playing a man short proved the winner as Calgary Centennials nipped Winnipeg 4-3. It was Holland's second goal of the game.

Terry McDougall sparked Broncos, who picked up their first win in three starts on the West Coast, by scoring two goals and drawing three assists.

After Loss Foster Says Ali Can't Beat Frazier

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Muhammed Ali still says that Joe Frazier, the only man who has beaten him, is wearing a crown "too heavy for his brow."

But Bob Foster, who lost by an eighth-round knockout to Ali Tuesday night, landed a left jab that cut the ex-champ early in the fight and later cut Ali with his remarks.

"I don't think he can punch like Frazier," said Foster, the reigning light heavy champion who was knocked out in the second round by Frazier in a 1970 heavyweight title match.

"I don't think he can beat him."

Ali sat quietly, holding an ice pack to the swelling left side of his face as he listened to Foster's comments during a postfight conference. Then he repeated what he's been saying since losing a 15-round decision 20 months ago in the biggest money event in boxing history:

"I want Frazier. I don't want the division to die because the champion is killing it."

Frazier has fought just two unranked opponents, for a total of eight rounds, since beating Ali, who has gone into the ring nine times for a total of 86 rounds in that period.

Foster, who at 180 was outweighed by 41 pounds, gave Ali some of the roughest rounds in his 41-fight pro career despite being knocked down seven times. Foster went down the final time 40 seconds into the eighth round.

"He's a great, great fighter," said Ali. "I've got a cut and a bruise. That's something that Frazier nor anyone else couldn't do to me.

Ali was guaranteed $250,000 for the scheduled 12-rounder in the theatre showroom of the Sahara-Tahoe Hotel. Foster, whose ring record is now 49-6, received $125,000.

The heavyweight division spotlight now shifts from this ski and gambling resort area to Jamaica, where Frazier is scheduled to meet unbeaten George Foreman, ranked the No. 2 contender behind Ali, on Jan. 22.

"If he fights George Foreman and whups him, that will make up for his idleness," Ali said. "He's fighting a good man—the best besides me."

Foster, 6-foot-4, looked like a basketball player in the ring with his heavier opponent.

Foster said he was bothered by the weight difference, but more by Ali's quick and constant lefts that kept him from scoring with his own dangerous left hooks.

"A guy who weighs 221 pounds isn't supposed to have hands that fast," said Foster.

Ali concluded, "He didn't know I was as fast as I am and I didn't know he was as good as he is."

Foster said he plans to defend his title next month, although no match is set yet, and Ali will soon take off on an exhibition tour that will include several stops in the Far East.

He Took On The Octopus, Now Mr. Grumpy Is Gone

There are some people you don't forget, or incidents relating to them either.

For weeks the maill slot had been filled to overflowing with missives from Seattle, a conglamoration of press releases, facts and figures, trivia, but mostly all about one, Pete Rademacher.

Rademacher was the Olympic heavyweight boxing champion and, despite the fact that he had never won, or even had, one professional bout, suddenly he was to be in a fight for the world's heavyweight championship.

The genius who had masterminded this seemingly impossible coup was Jack Hurley of Seattle, one of boxing's most flamboyant promoters. A master of frothy prose, his press releases were a joy indeed and, by the sheer bulk of them, couldn't be ignored. Besides, he was his own boss, afraid of nobody in boxing, or even the one-time octopus of the sport, the International Boxing Club.

With a rickety typewriter, Hurley took on his own press campaign to build up his fighters, and even challenged the mighty IBC, before the supreme court in the U.S. dissolved it as a monopoly.

Thus it was that Rademacher found himself in a ring in Sicks Stadium one summer night in 1957 with Floyd Patterson, then heavyweight champion of the world.

Rademacher got himself knocked out for his troubles, but the fight was a huge success, and grossed about $260,000, a fair take in those days.

A House Fighter Is Flushed Out

If Hurley had produced the impossible then, he did it another time, too.

This occasion Harry "Kid" Mathews was the central figure from the coast. Hurley wrote so many press releases extolling the virtues of Matthews that even the nation's press believed it, and demanded that the IBC put up its house fighter, Rocky Marciano, against the blown-up middleweight from Seattle.

The fight lasted only two rounds, but Hurley and Matthews had a $50,000 guarantee as their end of the bargain.

Which brings up another story of Hurley. When Matthews first came to Hurley, he objected to the manager cutting him 50 per cent instead of the usual 33⅓ per cent.

Hurley replied: "You've been fighting 10 years. How much money have you got? Nothing. You need me more than I need you . . . etc. Matthews finally retired a richer man than before he met Hurley.

Hurley made his home in the Olympic hotel in Seattle. The lobby was his outer office, his room was the inner sanctum. Tickets he sometimes distributed from an old felt hat, and he peered at visitors though thick glasses with lenses as thick as the bottoms of pop bottles.

He was a chronic complainer, but it came honestly. He had as many as 32 operations, 24 on his sinuses alone, and two-thirds of his stomach had been cut out.

About Guns, Gals, and 'Great'

A quiet, peaceful man, there were times when he was "forced" to carry a gun.

Vince Foster, one of his boys, was "a cuckoo," Hurley once said. "He was preaching when he was picked up on a rape charge. He said I was the devil, and that's when I started carrying a gun." When Hurley had Matthews, he also toted a pistol. Some hoodlums from the East wanted part of the action, but Hurley wasn't giving any away.

In latter years, Hurley still had the odd club fighter, but in all his years in the boxing game, at least 50, his biggest disappointment was that he never had a champion.

The Fargo Express, Billy Petrolle, was probably his best boy. Petrolle beat nine champions in his time, but all in overweight bouts. Then when he fought Tony Canzoneri for the title, he lost. At last report Petrolle was operating two religious goods stores in Duluth.

There was one thing about Hurley — he was always willing to hold court for visiting press. "Tickets? Sure, for a Canadian, anytime," he replied at the time of the Rademacher-Patterson set-to. "I may want to let you see one of my boys up there sometime," he said. In later years, on other visits, he would expound on his favorite sport, and often did.

Hurley blamed television for the decline in boxing, and fast women ("creatures" he called them) for the decline in his fighters. Jack Dempsey, he once said, was the best heavyweight, but Mike Gibbons and Henry Armstrong were the only fighters he would call "great."

But now only his stories will live on. Jack Hurley, Mr. Grumpy himself, died last week, where he lived. In his office at home in the Olympic.

Ticats Getting Back to Basics

HAMILTON (CP) — Ignoring all the fancy terminology of football —wishbone, audibles, blitzes, red dogs, et al — Jerry Williams, coach of Hamilton Tiger-Cats, said Tuesday his team has to "block, tackle," if it's to beat Ottawa Rough Riders Sunday.

Hamilton has to overcome a 12-point deficit — the Ticats lost 19-7 in the first of the two-game, total-point Eastern Football Conference final last Saturday — to gain a berth in the Grey Cup.

All Williams would say about his club's chances was, "We have a chance."

He won't make any lineup changes for the game.

"There's no reason to change now. We won 10 games in a row and we beat them (Ottawa) three times. There's no reason to change."

Being behind after the first game of the conference finals isn't new to the Ticats, but there's a difference this time:

In former years, Hamilton's muscle had been able to overcome the deficit. This time, the Riders built their lead with a show of strength, dominating Hamilton physically.

Jon Hohman, a veteran of the Tiger-Cat offensive line which was criticized for its sieve-like performance in Saturday's game, said the Riders threw a few new, unexpected alignments at them.

"For instance they would come up in an alignment and then switch positions just before the ball went into play. We picked it up, but at first it was upsetting — just for a split second, but that's enough."

He credited Ottawa's defence for excellent timing.

"They were so fast off the mark they were offside a couple of times and weren't called for it."

Tiger-Cat players, who practised on muddy natural turf in preparation for the opening game in Ottawa, didn't think it would help the Rough Riders to work out on the artificial turf in Toronto, as they are contemplating.

"They're different kinds of turf — it's Astro turf here and Tartan in Toronto," said one player.

The Ticats feel their turf offers better traction.

CBC Pays $1.2 Million To Televise CFL Games

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC has outbid CTV for the rights to telecast 1973 Canadian Football League games, paying an estimated $1.2 million to have the first pick on which games it will show.

CFL games will be split between the two networks, with the CBC carrying Saturday games and CTV those on Sunday and some in mid-week.

This year's schedule, including the Grey Cup game, cost CTV $1.45 million.

The exact price paid for the 1973 rights hasn't been revealed. However, a news conference has been called for next Monday to announce the switch.

Allowing CTV to have Sunday games leaves the CBC free to continue importing National Football League games on Sunday.

The CBC has long been after the CFL to play more Saturday games in the early part of the schedule. It also has demanded the right to show some Regina games in other parts of Saskatchewan instead of blacking out the whole province.

"It's a very happy thing for the football people, since both networks bid aggressively," said John Bassett, controlling shareholder in both CFTO, which handles Ottawa and Hamilton games for CTV, and the Argonaut Football Club.

Winnipeg Flies Right Without Its Jet

By The Canadian Press

Despite being without its Jet, Winnipeg had enough power Tuesday night to leave Houston well behind in World Hockey Association play.

Bobby Hull, the Golden Jet of Winnipeg, was grounded by a court order issued Monday in Chicago which said he couldn't play because a $2.5 million bond hadn't been posted by the WHA as required by an earlier court ruling.

However, lawyers for Hull filed an appeal of the court order and asked the Illinois Appellate Court for an emergency hearing to have it dissolved.

Hull said Tuesday he hoped the situation would be cleared up by Thursday when the Jets again play in Houston. As it is, he's the highest paid non-player in the sports world. He jumped from Chicago Black Hawks of the National Hockey League to the Jets for a contract calling for $2.75 million.

Meanwhile, his mates on the ice were more than the Aeros could handle as Winnipeg took a 4-2 decision and improved its hold on first-place in the Western Division.

In other games, Minnesota Fighting Saints defeated Alberta Oilers 4-3 in overtime; Ottawa Nationals downed Quebec les Nordiques 4-2 and Cleveland Crusaders hammered Los Angeles Sharks 5-2.

In Houston, with 4,643 fans on hand, Chris Bordeleau scored his 16th and 17th goals of the season, both unassisted, to pace the Jet win.

Ab McDonald and Cal Swenson got the other Jet goals with Gord Labossiere scoring both Aeros' goals.

Cleveland got the top-notch goaltending it expects from former Boston Bruin Gerry Cheevers, who stopped 46 Los Angeles shots, 20 in the first period.

In the first, the Crusaders fired 12 shots at Russ Gillow in the Sharks' net and got two past him—Ron Buchanan's 12th of the season and the first of two by Dick Pumple. Cheevers handled the LA shots flawlessly.

Ted Hampson, a journeyman in the NHL, scored at 6:42 of overtime to give Minnesota its win over Alberta.

Goals by George Morrison and Fred Speck set up the overtime.

In an all-Canadian affair in Ottawa watched by just 2,746 fans, the Nationals withstood a les Nordiques rally for a 4-2 decision.

Ottawa forged ahead 4-0 on first-period goals by Rick Sentes, Guy Trottier and Ron Climie and a second-period score by Wayne Carleton.

Alain Caron and Michel Archambault scored on power plays, with J. C. Tremblay getting assists on both, to narrow the margin. However, Ottawa goalie Les Binkley closed the door and the third period was scoreless.

Boxers Survive Surge by YMCA

London Boxing Club held off a surge late in the seond half to defeat YMCA 70-66 in a Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League game Tuesday night at Cedar Hill Junior High School.

Boxers, now tied for the lead with Hotel Douglas, enjoyed a 36-24 edge at the intermission but YMCA closed the gap to within two points with minutes remaining.

Time ran out as Boxers sank the final basket.

Jim McKay led Boxers with 14 points while Dan Ireland (12) and Mark Anderson (11) also hit double figures.

Jim Cunningham led YMCA with 16 points and Dave Crowley added 13.

B.C. Resident Hunting Considerably Valuable

Strictly in terms of hard cash, not to speak of the intrinsic values which cannot really be measured, the worth of resident hunters to the economy of this province is vastly underrated.

This was the impression we got after perusing the latest study prepared for the fish and wildlife branch by Pearse Bowden Economic Consultants Limited on The Value of Resident Hunting in British Columbia.

"Resident hunters spent nearly $40 million on their hunting activity during the 1970-71 season, an average of $290 per hunter, or $21.50 per day of hunting. The magnitude of these expenditures provides some insight into the extent to which resident hunters value their sport," states the report.

These expenditures, however, only provide a reference-point to the value of the wildlife resource to resident hunters since the money spent on food, lodging, transportation and equipment does not strictly define the picture.

"The real value of the hunting opportunities provided by the wildlife resource is more appropriately meaured by what hunters would be willing to pay for their sport."

★ ★ ★

Following a survey, the authors of the report came up with some interesting figures.

"The estimated value of a day of hunting ranged from $5 for upland bird, waterfowl and small game hunting to over $20 for mountain sheep hunting. Moose hunting was estimated to be worth $15 per day and deer hunting $10 per day. Using these estimates, the value of all resident hunting in British Columbia during the 1970-71 season was calculated to be $14,450,000.

"This contrasts sharply with the total actually paid for hunting licences and tags, which was only $1,365,000."

We would like to point out that it also is a far cry from the total expenditure of the branch for 1970-71 of $2,535,320, much less the $431,004 spent on wildlife management.

Even more startling is the value today of projected hunting in the future. The capitalized or "lump-sum" is $255 million.

Despite these discrepancies, there is an indication that resident hunters would be willing to pay even more for a hunting licence — providing the money was spent on management. With this proviso, about 60 per cent of the hunters polled "would be willing to pay at least $10 for their licence, which presently costs only $4."

The report also deals with the declining quality of hunting in B.C.

"It is not melodramatic to say that game managers are presently facing a crisis situation, a situation in which they find themselves less and less able to meet the demands of hunters, or to protect the wildlife resource in situations of conflict with other land uses.

"The growing complexity of the problems of game management requires imaginative new approaches, and, perhaps above all, the commitment of sufficient public funds to do what is necessary to preserve the quality of hunting in this province. Game mangers do not lack imagination and energy: modest programs of habitat protection and improvement have been instituted and new approaches to rationing hunting pressure are under consideration — two of the most critical areas.

★ ★ ★

"But these efforts are hampered by the lack of funds to carry out new programs on the scale required. Even the enforcement of game regulations, the most basic of management tasks, is at present inadequate with a small staff of conservation officers obliged to cover large territories.

"The abundance of game no longer compensates for limited management input."

The report admittedly fails to take into account the subsistance value of game for some people, particularly the natives, or the value of wildlife in terms of "non-consumptive recreation."

But it must be remembered that it is the hunters who foot 100 per cent of the bill for maintaining the resource.

As a parting shot, the report says:

"In British Columbia game management to date has fallen far short of the level of intensity which is possible with present knowledge and management techniques. In light of these factors, a significant increase in management expenditures would seem opportune and would no doubt be more than justified — both in terms of the value of recreation for hunters and the values which other people attach to our wildlife resources."

Take note, Bob Williams.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Rookie Curves Way to Award

NEW YORK (AP) — Jon Matlack, who mastered a major league curve ball just last winter and used it to win 15 games for New York Mets in the 1972 baseball season, today was named the National League's Rookie of the Year.

The 22-year-old southpaw was a runaway winner of the award, receiving 19 out of a possible 24 votes from the Baseball Writers Association of American committee.

His landslide win was the biggest since Kenny Hubbs of Chicago Cubs polled 19 after the 1962 season.

The writers distributed their remaining votes to catcher Dave Rader of San Francisco Giants, who received four ballots, and New York Met outfielder John Milner, who got one.

Matlack was a pleasant surprise for the Mets, who needed a solid southpaw starter when Jerry Koosman came up with arm problems in spring training.

Matlack spent three seasons with the Mets' triple-A farm team at Tidewater before coming up at the end of last season. He lost three games with the Mets in limited work, then pitched winter ball in Puerto Rico in an attempt to learn to control his curve.

Getting the opportunity to face major league hitting also improved his confidence. Matlack stepped right into the starting rotation and wound up the second highest winner on the staff behind ace Tom Seaver.

Matlack had a 15-10 record with a 2.32 earned run average, the best on the team and the fourth best in the league. The left-hander started 32 games, completed eight of them and pitched four shutouts.

Matlack was the Mets' No. 1 draft choice from West Chester, Pa., high school in 1967.

Rader took over the Giants' regular catching job about a month into the season. His 1972 credentials included a .259 batting average, six home runs and 41 runs batted in.

Milner was a Met regular in his first full year, hitting 17 homers and compiling a .238 batting average.

Catcher Earl Williams of Atlanta Braves won the award last year.

Islanders Just Love California

By The Canadian Press

New York Islanders don't win many National Hockey Leagues games, but when they do they pick on clubs from California.

So far this year, the Islanders, playing their first season in the NHL, have won only three games—two against California Golden Seals and one against Los Angeles Kings.

Tuesday night, they beat the Seals 4-2. They also beat the Seals Nov. 1—that one was a little easier, 6-2—and they took Los Angeles 3-2 Oct. 12 for their first NHL victory.

If they hope to move from their basement position in the Eastern Division, they'll have to beat someone else. With just seven points—the Islanders tied Chicago Black Hawks 4-4 on Oct. 28—they're eight points behind seventh-place Toronto Maple Leafs.

In other games Tuesday the results were: St. Louis 4, Vancouver 2, and New York Rangers 3, Atlanta 1.

The Seals' loss combined with St. Louis' win put last-place California three points behind the Blues in the Western Division.

Brian Spencer and Ed Westfall were the keys to New York's win. Spencer fired the winner on a pass from Westfall and then Westfall wrapped it up after a pass from Spencer. Both goals came in the final period.

The Islanders were full value for their win, outshooting California 33-23 as 11,037 fans watched in Uniondale, N.Y.

Meanwhile, in the other expansion city, Atlanta Flames disappointed their 11,505 fans with their loss to the Rangers, who moved to within three points of league-leading Montreal Canadiens in the East.

Atlanta was caught up the ice during a power play with the score 1-1 in the second period. Bill Fairbairn took a lead pass from Walt Tkaczuk and scored his ninth goal of the season, which stood as the winner.

In St. Louis, Chris Evans scored for the Blues with 7:29 left in the game to break a 2-2 tie. Vancouver, desparately trying for the tie, pulled goalie Dunc Wilson with 53 seconds left, but as so often happens the move backfired and Mike Murphy fired the puck into the open net, sending 17,854 St. Louis fans home happy.

Only Two Lions Land On All-Western Team

MONTREAL (CP) — Mack Herron, the miniature running back of Winnipeg Blue Bombers, and the man who opens up the holes for him, guard Bob Lueck, were the only unanimous choices on the Western Football Conference all-star team announced Tuesday.

Don Jonas, the Blue Bomber quarterback, wasn't unanimous, but he was well ahead of the second-place quarterback, Tom Wilkinson of Edmonton Eskimos, on the team chosen by the Football Reporters of Canada.

In addition to 11 Winnipeg players six on offence and five on defence—the selectors from Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver picked six Eskimos, five Calgary Stampeders, three Saskatchewan Roughriders and two British Columbia Lions.

Three players were picked as wide receivers because of a tie in the voting: Jim Thorpe of the Bombers, Gerry Shaw of the Stampeders and Jim Young of the Lions.

Rookie Tyrone Walls of Edmonton and veteran defensive end Bill Baker of Saskatchewan were one vote shy of being unanimous.

Herron, the Western nominee for the outstanding Canadian Football League player award, picked up 1,527 yards rushing this year. He ran for 11 touchdowns, caught three passes for majors and ran 120 yards with a kickoff against Edmonton for another touchdown.

12 Qualify In Skating

PORT ALBERNI — Twelve young skaters qualified here Monday for the B.C. sectional figure skating championships at Victoria, Dec. 7-9.

Only the top three in each of the pre-novice class competitions at the Vancouver Island regional championships could qualify for the B.C. sectionals.

Victoria's Racquet Club captured the Island team title with 38 points. Victoria Figure Skating Club was runner-up with 11 points and Port Alberni's Mt. Arrowsmith was third with eight.

Approximately 90 skaters took part in the two-day competition.

Government Calls Signals

By The Canadian Press

The federal government will do everything it can to prevent the Canadian Football League from expanding into the United States, Health Minister John Munro said Tuesday night.

Munro, minister responsible for sport in Canada, said the federal government has powers of sanction in the areas of immigration, broadcasting and taxation to prevent the CFL from moving into the U.S., or to prevent a National Football League invasion of Canada.

Commenting on a meeting held earlier in the day with John Bassett, owner of Toronto Argonauts, and Jake Gaudaur, CFL commissioner, Mr. Munro said the government would "regard expansion of the NFL into Canada as something to be deplored."

"We will do everything we can to prevent it happening. This is government policy. Having said that, we hope that we can work something out with the CFL rather than invoke sanctions."

Following the hastily-called meeting with Munro, Bassett said an Argonaut motion to the CFL meeting in Winnipeg last week recommending expansion into the U.S. will be withdrawn when the owners meet next week in Hamilton.

His statement was well received by other CFL spokesmen, particularly those in Western Canada, most of whom strongly opposed a move into the U.S.

Bassett said after the meeting he made it clear to Munro that "those of us who believe in expansion, our objectives are the same . . . a strong Canadian Football League."

Nevertheless, something had to be done because "two or three teams cannot carry the financial load indefinitely."

Bassett used the Argonauts to explain the financial woes of some CFL clubs: The Argos had subsidized the league to the tune of $413,000 in equalization payments and television revenue over the last four seasons.

The proposal to expand into the U.S. had not been made on the assumption more money would be available, but to ensure the financial viability of the league and "to keep it alive."

Sam Berger, owner of Montreal Alouettes, said he would support any motion which would keep the league Canadian.

When asked what he thought of CFL expansion into the U.S., he said:

"In principle, I would like to see Canadian Football continue as it has in the past, if this can be done."

David Loeb, owner of Ottawa Rough Riders, said he was in favor of exploring the idea of expansion as long as the threat exists that the NFL might seek a franchise in Canada, or that a third league might appear to fragment Canadian teams.

If the CFL didn't go into the U.S. he was in favor of expanding in Canada.

The CFL clubs in Winnipeg, Saskatchewan, Edmonton and Calgary were pleased the U.S. expansion idea would be dropped...

"The future has never looked brighter for Canadian football," said Gordon Muirhead, president of Winnipeg Blue Bombers. "The government support for preventing expansion into the U.S. exceeded our (Western Conference team owners' greatest expectations."

Saskatchewan Roughrider president Alan Sangster said he was glad Bassett "saw the light."

"It would have ruined Canadian football. . . . There is no doubt in my mind that expansion would have killed Canadian football."

Flyers Help Out As Gulls Ascend

Juan de Fuca Gulls received an "assist" from Fuller's Lake Flyers on Tuesday night to vault into a tie for first place in the South Island junior "B" Hockey League.

Gulls bulldozed Lake Cowichan Bairds Trucking 6-1 at Juan de Fuca Arena while Flyers held the co-leaders, Victoria Nixons, to a 5-5 deadlock at Memorial Arena.

In another game at Juan de Fuca, Saanich Braves defeated Racquet Club Kings 12-3.

Al Hardy, Norm Baker, Ed Nichols, Dave Archibald, Barry McLachlan and Steve Hansen counted for Gulls while Doug Knott replied for Cowichan.

It was the second time in less than a week that Flyers and Nixons had tied by the same score.

Paul Livingstone led Fuller's Lake with two goals and single tallies were added by Doug Clark, Ray and Don Stubbington.

Jamie Robertson, Rob Wilson, Gary Shumka, Larry Hansen and Norm Allen scored for Victoria.

Brent Patterson, Brad Maxwell and Tom Davies scored twice for Braves while singles were added by Cam Kring, Dwight Crocket, Tom Tillotson, Ken McLaren, Dave Peet and Kevin Schamehorn. Bob Boyd, George Longmore and Brian Matvenko tallied for Kings.

A SHORT SEASON FOR WINDERMERE

VANCOUVER (CP) — Fourteen members of the Windermere secondary school basketball team were suspended Tuesday from all extra-curricular activities for the remainder of the sports season for drinking during a weekend trip to Salmon Arm for an exhibition game.

The suspensions mean Windermere will not field a team in the Vancouver Senior High League this year.

School principal R. B. Brett, who handed out the suspensions, said he was not prepared to discuss the incident.

Coach Bill Howard said the suspensions will affect a number of scholarships that would have been made available to certain players.

Two Canuck Squads In Swedish Tourneys

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Two Canadian amateur hockey teams, British Columbia Totems and Barrie Flyuers, have entered two major Swedish tournaments here at Christmas and New Year's.

The Totems, an all-star team from the Western International Hockey League with most players from the Allan Cup winner, Spokane Jets, meet Finnish IFK of Helsinki in their opener Dec. 28 in Ahearne Cup competition.

The Totems play Russian Spartak of Moscow, winner of the tourney last year, in their sixth and last game in a double-header Jan. 6.

Seven teams, four of the Swedish, are entered in the traditional Ahearne Cup tournament named after Bunny Ahearne, the British president of the International Ice Hockey Federation.

Home Runs Fail To Help Canada

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (CP-AP) — Brazil defeated Canada 4-2 Tuesday night in the 20th world amateur baseball tournament, despite two home runs by Wayne Martin.

Martin, who also homered Monday in a game against Costa Rica, his hos first in the opening inning and his second in the eighth.

Mitsushoyi Sato allowed seven Canadian hits in gaining the victory for Brazil. Sato is one of several players on the team of Japanese descent.

Canada has two wins and four losses. Unbeaten Cuba and Nicaragua moved to the top of the standing while the United States, also unbeaten, had a day off.

Cuba defeated Japan 2-0 on a one-hitter by right-hander Jose Antonio Huelga. Cuba collected only three hits but two balks combined with a pair of errors accounted for both Cuban runs.

Nicaragua swamped West Germany 17-1 and Puerto Rico defeated El Salvador 7-1. Cuba and Nicaragua are 6-0 and the U.S. 5-0 in the won-lost column.

Dervishes Whirl to Communicate With Their Gods

New York Times

NEW YORK — "At first you get dizzy," said Ahmet Bican Kasapoglu. "Then you learn to focus your eyes on the tip of your thumb and tilt your head to the right. Now I don't experience anything but God."

Kasapoglu is a dervish, or Moslem mystic. Some dervishes howl themselves into religious ecstacy. Others are said to have done it through drugs or slashing themselves with knives. Others whirl.

Kasapoglu and the company of Turkish whirling dervishes of which he is the dance master performed their centuries-old religious ritual at the Brooklyn Academy of Music during the New York visit of their current tour of the U.S. and Canada.

To chanting and the music of the flute, zither, long-necked lute and other Turkish instruments, nine white-robed dervishes spin in a counter-clockwise direction with their arms extended and move gracefully around the stage in what they report to be mystical cummunion with Allah.

Their tour is largely the result of an effort by Turkish authorities to bolster tourism through the revival of their nation's cultural heritage. Their audiences, though, have been made up of many young people interested in Yoga, Sufism, Transcendental Meditation and other forms of Eastern religion and philosophy, and some members of the company see themselves as bearers of a religious message.

"The world today is too involved in materialism," said the 65-year-old Kasapoglu. "People need the kind of spirituality you find through a discipline like ours. In time they will see it as important."

Dervishes are members of one of a number of mystical Islamic associations or religious orders that have existed in Turkey and other areas of the Middle East since the 11th or 12th centuries.

The name comes from a Persian word meaning "begger."

Kasapoglu and his fellow dancers and musicians are heirs of the Mevlevi mystical tradition, which was established in the 13th century by Mevalna Celaleddin Rumi, one of Persia's greatest mystical poets.

Dervishes lived together or wandered as mendicants and followed an austere life-style. Over the centuries their orders came to have considerable social and political influence, but in 1925 they were banned in Turkey by the government of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk as part of his program to turn the country into a modern secular and Western state.

In 1954 the Mevlavi order was allowed to revive itself and to put on a two-week ceremony each December in Kenya, its city of origin. The annual revival is sponsored by the Tourism Association of Kenya. The religious ritual is presided over by a sheikh, or religious leader who stand on a red goat-skin and represents Mevlana. Each dancer wears a brown felt hat that looks like a large fez and a black robe that is discarded to reveal a floor-length white skirt and white shirt once the whirling starts.

Kasapogly, who comes from a long line of dervishes and who took part in the ritual as a boy before it was banned, said that the dancers are in a state of trance from the montra-like chanting and the sound of a long flute solo by the time they begin to whirl.

As they turn they hold their right palm upward to receive energy and grace from heaven and their left hand downward as a means of dispensing this divine gift to mankind.

The dance master, who wears a white hat and walks about directing the dancers during the ritual, said that they are in control of themselves at all times.

"It is a spiritual feeling," he said, "but we are in reality. We don't give ourselves over to unreality."

The 90-minute ritual begins with instrumental music and slowly increases in tempo and intensity until the climax of the whirling which lasts nearly half an hour.

Cambodia Facing Famine

By JOHN PARCELL

PHNOM PENH (Reuter) — Cambodia is facing its worst rice harvest in memory because of a nationwide drought, the widespread abandonment of farms and fighting along the main highways.

drought, the widespread abandonment of farms and fighting along the main highways.

In the latest move to aid this war-torn Indochina republic, the United States has promised to give 30,000 tons of rice early next year, increasing its food aid budget for Cambodia to more than $25 million.

Many experts here believe that may be only a first instalment if widespread hunger is to be prevented next year. Japan has promised another 7,000 tons as humanitarian aid.

The government, which has taken control of all rice distribution, has avoided an immediate crisis thanks to an American airlift from Saigon and emergency imports from neighboring Thailand.

The imported rice is on sale in this crowded capital at less than the price on the thriving black market but 50 per cent more than the best grains cost three months ago. Buyers are rationed to 11 pounds each.

The dimensions of the current shortage, which touched off food riots here in September, are considered extremly serious by Western experts.

Chiefly to blame is the drought, which has prevented planting or withered the growing crop in almost every province.

ALLEGE CORRUPTION

Farmers also have abandoned their land because of insecurity, fleeing to swell the number of unproductive consumers in the towns and cities. Others have fallen under the control of North Vietnamese or local Communists.

As a result the area under cultivation has fallen this year by an average of 60 per cent in the major growing provinces where detailed surveys are made and the parched fields which are still cultivated are yielding 15 per cent less grain in the current harvest, expert say.

With harvest failure looming, many farmers have been hoarding what little rice there is for their own use in the long, difficult months ahead.

In the towns and cities people have been eating up the stocks which almost every Cambodian family keeps as a kind of insurance.

The crisis has ended hopes of stabilizing the war-damaged economy. Inflation, which halted at the beginning of the year, reached 12 per cent during August alone.

The crop failure also has brought increasing dissatisfaction with the war and the administration of President Lon Nol, together with widespread allegations of official corruption.

Mother Buried

SAPELE, Nigeria (Reuter) — A 45-year-old rubber tapper has been sentenced to death by a high court judge here for burying alive his 75-year-old mother in a local rubber plantation.

Babitter, Hedger Numbers Now

LONDON (CP) — Once in Britain there was the babitter and exhauster, the shot blaster and agrostologist, the aplarist and festooner, the gaffer and the hackler, the corset strapper, slagger, stripper and gut seeker.

And that was just the beginning. Now they're mere numbers: 713.13, 629.99, 541.55 . . .

The national employment department has just published a three-volume job classification list with 3,500 occupations all numbered for computer consumption.

Gone are the potato crisp inspector, poker-in, rumbler, hedger, roughneck, roustabout and trouble shooter.

And adding salt to the wounds is the fact that the employment people apparently rank the occupations in a way which gives the lowest numbers to those they consider most important.

The highest rating — 00 — predictably goes to cabinet ministers, to MPs and top civil servants who get 001 treatment while 002 goes to industrial managers.

Stockbrokers come out with 034 :10 while a false twister, apparently a kind of leather worker, weighs in with 542.75. A wood stainer comes out with 812.70.

Strippers of vegetables end up with 551.55 while strippers entertainment turn out with 173.50.

That's not far behind journalists who finish with 151.30.

'Let's Abolish Bad Weather'

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UPI) — Gentle rain at night and balmy breezes in the daytime is the weather picture John Kenton is painting if he could persuade people to implement his plan to abolish hurricanes, tornadoes and floods.

The physical fact that heat will rise if there is cold air under it has drawn the retired navy man to the conclusion that with faith, courage and money, a project could be undertaken which would eliminate the disasters caused by forces of nature.

His appeals to government bodies, however, have fallen on deaf ears.

He envisions six gigantic troughs cut from each coast to the Mississippi River Delta.

On the west coast the cuts would be at San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, in northern California, Portland and the Canadian border. The east coast cuts would be on the same geographical line.

"The one at the Canadian line would draw all cold storms that come out of Canada southward," he said. "They would draw the storms to the ocean."

Storms which come across the ocean to San Francisco would be drawn eastward, and so forth.

"These cuts would use the simple heat and convection currents to control the weather," he said. The heat of the interior would draw the cool ocean air inland, where it would be heated and shoved upwards by other cool air slipping under it.

"With the proper cuts on the Atlantic Ocean, typhoons would be drawn away from the eastern seaboard, away from the heavily populated areas. There is no reason why the seaboard should get them each year. The draft caused by the heat of the interior drawing the cool Atlantic air would create such a suction that it would catch any storm that was moving along the coast."

The major problems would be the size of the cuts, the cost and the uprooting of whatever was in the path.

Kenton proposes the troughs be six miles wide for every one-thousand feet of depth. In mountainous terrain, this could be as much as 40 or 50 miles wide.

Super highways would be constructed at the bottom of the cuts.

Admitting the cost would be phenomenal, Kenton points out the fill land acquired could be sold commercially to help defray expenses. For instance, some of the fill could be used for offshore airports while other would be used for recreation or new housing developments.

He also feels the smog problem would diminish because the moist air would push smog, salt and dust upwards, resulting in clear days and light rain at night.

Kenton has written to President Nixon and the Army Corps of Engineers and testified before state and local government bodies.

Maj. Gen. A. P. Rollins, Jr., deputy chief of engineers, wrote on behalf of President Nixon that hurricanes and other phenomena are caused by other factors not related to topography, such as winds, temperature and moisture.

He wrote, "The day may come when control or partial control of hurricanes may serve to prevent damage and injury. Until then we must be prepared to live with hurricanes, including occasional severe ones."

Kenton argues studies have shown that any storm will take the least line of resistance and the time to take action is now. He feels elimination of disasters and providing water where there now is desert are worth the effort.

Criminal Agents Sought

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) The U.S. attorney's office here is conducting a sweeping investigation of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in an effort to weed out agents who have committed crimes, an official of the service's union says.

Noel Doran, Southwest regional vice-president of the National Council of Immigration and Naturalization Locals, said Monday that an investigation is in progress and is supported by the union.

The U.S. attorney in San Diego, Harry Steward, would make no comment on the reported inquest.

The New York Times says the study has turned up evidence of narcotics and gun-smuggling, sexual exploitation of alien women and sale and falsification of documents.

The Times also reports that sources close to the investigation, known as Operation Clean Sweep, said there is evidence of close ties between immigration officials and organized crime figures.

Doran told reporters the investigation started last fall and that federal grand juries are calling witnesses to gather information.

The Times says the U.S. attorney in San Diego is conducting the investigation because many of the officials involved were stationed in the Southwest at the time of an alleged conspiracy.

France Cuts Colony Debt

OUAGADOUGOU, Upper Volta (AP) — President Georges Pompidou announced today that France is abandoning the recovery of a billion francs ($195 million) owed it by its former African colonies.

In a speech before Upper Volta's National Assembly, Pompidou said the decision reflects France's "desire to set an example and to lighten the burden of debt of the countries to which France is linked through co-operation agreements."

Pompidou is on a five-day official visit to Upper Volta and Togo.

Provinces Seek Joint Action on Cable TV

By BILL COULTHARD

QUEBEC (CP) — Provincial ministers responsible for communications have ordered their civil servants to "seek agreement on a set of principles governing provincial action" in the field of cable television.

The ministers ended their first interprovincial conference Tuesday with provisions for continuing consultation between provinces on the communications question.

They also called for "meaningful" federal-provincial consultation.

The next meeting of provincial ministers is to be held at Jasper, Alta., next April and a report of the civil servants on "the very important cultural, economic and legal issues surrounding cable television" is to be presented then.

The joint statement at the end of the two-day conference said the ministers gave "grate emphasis . . . to their (the provinces') important role in the area of cable television."

However, the conference brought no agreement on areas of provincial jurisdiction in the communications field, currently controlled by the federal government through the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

G. R. Carton, Ontario communications minister, told a news conference:

"Many provinces have not yet established their communications policies. Ontario is one of them."

But Jean-Paul L'Allier, Quebec communications minister who was chairman of the conference, said Quebec plans to go ahead with legislation to bring cable television under Quebec control.

The legislation, before the Quebec national assembly for almost a year, would bring all aspects of communications under provincial control, with minor exceptions such as the assignment of frequencies for radio and television broadcast.

L. F. Werry, Alberta minister of telephones and utilities, said: "For Alberta, we would claim jurisdiction over everything but broadcasting."

A. L. Mackling, Manitoba minister of internal services, said a "vital role" remains for the federal government.

But he said it must be exercised so as to complement the regional objectives of the provinces.

Mr. Carton also said "the provinces recognize the federal government has responsibilities in communications."

The ministers, in stressing the need for meaningful federal-provincial consultation taking into account regional differences and priorities, criticized federal actions that cause "uneconomic duplication of, and competition for, facilities and services provided by provincial telecommunications systems."

This was described as mainly a problem in the West and the Maritime provinces, where federally-licensed bodies—CN-CP Telecommunications was mentioned—were "creaming off" the best business available without providing less-profitable services such as home telephones.

They also could restrict their services to profitable centres of population without having to provide services in remote and sparsely-populated areas, as local telephone companies are required to do.

Telephone Extras Studied

QUEBEC (CP) — A conference of provincial ministers responsible for communications has told the federal government it must wait until next year for provincial reaction to proposed federal standards for devices that plug into the telephone system.

The federal government published a document Monday suggesting standards to be applied to instruments designed to be connect to telephone lines.

Such devices, from user-owned telephones to computers and equipment designed to transmit photos and documents, can cause noise on telephone curcuits and other problems unless it is compatible with the phone network.

But the provincial ministers, who would set up a two-day meeting here Tuesday, agreed to tell the federal government it must wait until after their next meeting in April, 1973, for formal provincial responses to its proposed quality standards.

PROVINCES NEED TIME

L. F. Werry, Alberta minister of telephones and utilities, said in an interview:

"The federal government has come out with a study on this but we want time to examine it first.

"From an Alberta point of view, we're just not accepting federal standards if we don't agree with them."

He said most North American-manufactured equipment designed for use with phone lines is compatible, but some Japanese and German devices now being offered are not up to standard.

Another concern of the provincial ministers, he said, was that use of Canadian-made devices be encouraged.

Tax Relief Theory Shot Down

A $4,000 cost-benefit study released Tuesday by Oak Bay council shoots down the theory that apartment construction eases the tax burden of other residents. (See also Page 53.)

It also recommends multiple dwelling redevelopment of depressed areas, particularly the Milton-Elgin district which is bounded by Milton, Elgin, Granite and Foul Bay.

The study, which began in May 1971 by University of British Columbia town planning graduate student Fred Zech, was greeted with enthusiasm by zoning committee chairman Brian Smith today.

"It confirms the gut feeling that many of us have on council," he said, "that apartments aren't a roaringly desirable proposition for the municipality. It shows the net revenue is very samall, so small that happily it leaves municipal council with options. It shoots down the silly argument that they broaden the tax base, just as the Price, Waterhouse survey on the borough of York did."

Smith said that Zech's recommendation that the Milton-Elgin area be redeveloped with multiple dwellings fails right in line with his committee's thinking.

"This is why we're moving to rezone the Foul Bay area opposite the Safeway store down to apartments. This will be a hell of a lot better than the present zoning which allows a monstrous shopping complex and a sea of blacktop."

In his report Zech warns:

"Redevelopment has, over and above these 'savings,' impacts on the community unmeasurable or intangible. These costs and benefits must be weighed against purely economic considerations."

Summarizing on the Milton-Elgin area, he says:

"Multiple family housing to me, from my assessment of the situation, is an inevitable consequence to the symptoms encountered in the main study area under the present system of laisser-faire and individual initiative."

He says the area is obsolete because of such factors as skimpy lots, some bright and some unkempt private properties and some unkempt public places.

Several methods of developing the controversial Victoria Riding Academy site, with their relative costs and benefits, are dealt with in the report.

Because the 9.3-acre site is not close to industry, offices or shopping facilities, the report states potential residents would come from the nearby University of Victoria.

Zech states, however, that campus expansion at the university would not necessarily result in a strong demand for housing in that area.

Ont. House Ousts MLA For Raising 'Scandal'

TORONTO (CP) — Eddie Sargent (L—Grey-Bruce) was ousted from the Onatrio legislature, Tuesday when he attempted to introduce the Fidinam affair as a "matter of public importance."

Sargent had to be ordered six times to take his seat by Speaker Allan Reuter before he was "named" and escorted from the chamber by Maj. G. R. Soame, sergeant-at-arms.

Sargent was ruled out of order when he rose to take his place at the start of the session, which resumed sittings after a summer and fall recess.

Sargent's one-day banishment follows similar incidents at the end of the session last spring when he was named on two occasions by Reuter after an altercation with Darcy McKeough, then treasurer, over a beach development project in the Liberal member's riding.

Later in an interview, Sargent was grim-faced when he explained he had deliberately provoded his expulsion to bring to the public's attention the "scadal" of a $50,000 election contribution Fidinam Ontario Ltd. made last year to the Ontario Prgressive Conservative party.

The firm has received a $57 million contract to erect a building for the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Sargent is attemptin to have the Fidinam project stopped by court order.

In a prepared five-page statement that followed Mr. Sargent's ouster, Premier William Davis reiterated that the Fidinam donation had no connection with "any past, present, or future involvement by the contributor with the government."

Judging Course Planned

North and South Saanich Agricultural Society and Saanich School District are jointly sponsoring classes in judging, horticultural and small animals, to begin early next year.

Classes will be held in Mount Newton Secondary School and at the fair grounds.

John Looy was re-elected president of the agricultural society by acclamation at the annual meeting last Thursday, Nov. 16. Doug Miler was elected vice-president.

The society's annual banquet is Friday, Dec. 1, at 7 p.m. in the Agricultural Hall.

Mayor Eyes Vigilantes To Curb Crime Wave

PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE, Man. (CP) — Mayor H. L. Henderson says he will endeavor to "set up a vigilante committee on every block in the city" if what he described as a "wave of lawlessness" in Portage la Prairie cannot be stopped by more conventional means.

Speaking at a council meeting, Henderson recommended that a meeting be held with RCMP officials and police experts from Winnipeg.

But if this fails to produce solutions, "I propose to set up a vigilante committee on every block in the city." Henderson said lawbreakers would "have to go some to get by vigilantes if we can get the right people."

Such a vigilante system could include foot and car patrols, he said.

He was commenting on a crime report presented to the meeting by Ald. Garry Cobbe, which indicated house breakins and thefts in the city of 12,000 has recently risen sharply.

"A heavy load of drugs came into the city last week. People are getting edgy and the RCMP are edgy and they have every right to be," Henderson said.

It is not possible to increase the police force for financial reasons, he added.

Fund Plan Pleases Colleges

VANCOUVER (CP) — Administrators of British Columbia universities and colleges today approved education reforms announced by Education Minister Eileen Dailly Tuesday.

Walter Gage, president of the University of B.C., and Kenneth Strand, president of Simon Fraser University, both welcomed Mrs. Dailly's announcement of the formation of an advisory commission to advise the government on post-secondary education.

Dr. Strand said establishment of the board was "encouraging" and Dr. Gage said he was "pleased" with the announcement.

T. J. Gilligan, principal of Vancouver City College, said he was especially pleased at the announcement that the provincial government would assume 100 per cent of the capital costs of regional colleges.

"This will help us with our new campus, which we hope to get established in the next three years," Dr. Gilligan said.

"This change will enable us to carry out more reasonable and confident planning, because we know our finances are assured," he said. "Up to now we've had to go to referendum for our capital expenses, and that can be a risky business."

Junk Boom for Post Office

TORONTO (CP) — The sales literature known as "junk mail" is having a big surge in popularity—and the post office loves it.

A couple of years ago it was declining by about 80 million pieces a year. Now, thanks to new co-operation between postal authorities and direct-mail advertisers, mailmen are delivering a record one billion pieces a year—or one every second day to every household.

While its critics say junk mail is an expense to the taxpayer who supports the post office, postal officials say it's the other way round. Third-class mail is not subsidized, they say, but actually helps keep the cost of first-class mail down.

And don't call it junk mail, pleads Garth C. Campbell, assistant deputy postmaster-general in charge of marketing.

"Third-class mail accounts for 20 per cent of all mail and provides more than its share of revenue, so it's anything but junk."

Actually, postal people used to throw around the term, but not since they've gone gunning for the direct-mail business.

As one member of the Canadian Direct Mail Association said at its last annual convention, which was attended by 20 top postal officials: "Who'd have thought five years ago that the post office would be dispensing free drinks and advice at a direct-mail convention?"

Or for that matter that it would take a full magazine page to tell the public how "the people who send you ads-in-the-mail do a lot of nice things for you, and for us."

"It serves the same purpose for us as advertising in newspapers or on television serves for those media—it provides revenue that keeps down the cost of the rest of the service," said Jean-Pierre Cote, postmaster-general before he left politics this fall.

Association president Ted Heather, whose Toronto plant of Postal Promotions turns out one-fifth of all the mail going into the post office here, considers that his industry is much maligned.

New Horror Awaits War-Torn Jordan

By RALPH JOSEPH
CP Correspondent

TEHRAN (CP) — After living through the horrors of war, both across and within its borders for almost a quarter of a century, a new experience will be coming to Jordan in the new year—economic planning. The country's first three-year plan, for 1973-75, is expected to be published soon but already has succeeded in attracting considerable attention to the kingdom bordering Israel.

Wisely enough the modest plan will aim mainly at reviving Jordan's shattered agricultural economy, but also will focus on tourism and the development of light industries.

Agriculture and tourism were the mainstay of the economy of Jordan, which has a population of about two million, until the 1967 war with Israel. The hostilities resulted in the loss of the fertile West Bank to Israel.

Subsequent Israeli action against the Palestinian guerrillas based in or around the East Bank of the Jordan River valley prevented adequate use of whatever remained of Jordan's agricultural territory until 1970-71.

CUT OFF AID

After the 1967 war Jordan's economy was being propped by $100 million annual assistance from Libya, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. Both Libya and Kuwait cut off their assistance, amounting to $22.5 million and $40 million, respectively, after Jordan's expulsion of the guerrillas from her territory following the short but bloody civil war in 1970 and 1971.

Compounding this economic punishment Syria sealed her borders for Jordanian exports via Lebanese ports. The closure of the Suez canal already had limited the use of Aqaba on the Red Sea as an outlet for Jordan's produce.

The Syrians also closed their air space to Jordanian aircraft, forcing the Jordanian national airlines to use a circuitous route via Cyprus and Egypt to reach Amman.

This economic pressure from hostile Arab neighbors had the effect of pushing King Hussein closer to a detente with the Israelis.

Unofficial reports say Israel last summer was considering a deal with Amman to permit Jordan to use Gaza harbor to import goods. These imports would necessarily have to cross Israeli territory before entering Jordan via the East Bank. There has been no confirmation whether the deal—necessarily secret—has been finally struck. However, other reports say Israel is permitting Jordan to buy her agricultural needs from the Israeli-held West Bank.

The recent visit of Gaza's Mayor Rashed Shawa to Amman, where he met King Hussein and other top Jordanian officials, has raised speculation about what is happening behind the scenes. Israel is known to be spending $200,000 to develop Gaza's port facilities, though this is primarily meant to ease the burden on Haifa to the north.

Jordan's Arab neighbors, meanwhile, appear to have become concerned about pressing King Hussein too close to the Israelis. Syria, for example, relaxed border restrictions, permitting trucks carrying Jordanian phosphates to cross Syrian territory on their way to Lebanese ports.

King Hussein has himself closed Jordan's borders to the north, affecting both Lebanese and Syrian trade with countries to the south like Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Persian Gulf states.

NEIGHBORS CONCERNED

What disturbs Jordan's Arab neighbors is that if, as is alleged, a quantity of Israel's manufactured goods is getting into Jordan, it is bound to find its way from there to other Arab markets, such as Kuwait—given the Arab Common Market arrangement which permits the easy flow of goods from one Arab country to another. Israel long has had an eye on the potential Arab market for its manufactures.

A good quantity of Israeli goods is reported to have penetrated the Arab market and some estimates of these—mainly hosiery and knitted material—put this trade at about $500,000 a year.

Popcorn Sued for Butter

LOS ANGELES — Kurt Bondi and Alan Haber brought a $5 million class action suit Tuesday against five movie theatre chains and 3,000 John Does on behalf of everyone who eats popcorn at the movies.

Bondi and Haber, in their suit filed in superior court, claimed popcorn-eaters are defrauded daily because the yellow substance squirted atop the corn "is not real butter," but something made from soy bean oil to taste like butter.

VIENNA — City hall recently distributed questionnaires asking citizens what they wanted improved.

"My five children," said one reply.

ROUEN, France — Two young men tired to rob a drugstore but instead of getting money, one shot the other dead.

When a clerk refused to hand over the cash, one of the bandits opened fire and accidently killed his accomplice, police said.

DAVIDSON, N.C. — Gerald Plotz, Davidson College freshman pre-medical student, ate 51 hardboiled eggs in two hours Tuesday night.

He said $122 was wagered on his capacity to beat the 50 consumed by Paul Newman in the movie Cool Hand Luke.

Plotz, 18, calmed his stomach with a post-contest pint of chocolate ice cream.

KINGSTON, Ont. — Harold Ballard, 69, president of Maple Leaf Gardens of Toronto, has been moved to the 90-prisoner minimum security unit at nearby Millhaven after less than a month in Kingston penitentiary.

Ballard is serving a three-year sentence for fraud and theft of about $205,000 from the Gardens.

John Moloney, regional director of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, said Tuesday that while some prisoners in the minimum security unit work in the kitchen of the main Millhaven complex, a maximum security institution, he doubted that Ballard would be working there.

"I don't know his particular job," said Moloney.

HOUSTON — The U.S. treasury department has refunded a $10 meal for Donny Firsching's two pet rats.

The rats consumed half a $10 bill the 11-year-old boy left too near his rat cage.

The remains were sent to the treasury department with an explanation. Donny received a government check for the money he earned at a summer job.

HONOLULU — Elvis Presley says he will perform in a benefit concert, televised worldwide via satellite, for cancer research in Hawaii.

The singer said the benefit would be for the Kui Lee Cancer Fund. Kui Lee, a songwriter, died of cancer in 1966. He wrote "I'll Remember You," a regular in Presley's repertoire. The one-hour concert, to be broadcast from the Honolulu International Centre Jan. 14, 1973, will be beamed on the National Broadcasting Co. network.

FRIENDLY RIVALS meet over one of the one-eye bandits they both conscientiously check every day in Whitehorse. Valerie Matechuk is the city's official meter maid who goes around putting tickets on cars when the meter shows red. Joanne Schriock is the businessmen's official anti-meter maid whose aim is to keep one step ahead of Mrs. Matechuk and feed the meters with nickels so downtown shoppers will not be plagued with parking tickets. "We may be rivals, in a sense, but we're friendly rivals," Miss Schriock said after the two were seen having lunch together recently.

Noisy Neighbors' Murderer Jailed --For Three Years

LONDON (UP) — Victor Eeles was so enraged with his next door neighbors because of their constant harassment and noise that he went next door and killed them.

On Tuesday, a judge sentenced Eeles to three years in jail.

Eeles, 36, was found guilty of manslaughter in the deaths of his neighbors, James and Constance Prescott and their 27-year-old daughter Marjorie.

He testified during his trial that he shot the Prescotts to death with a target pistol after they had subjected him and his family to three years of "living hell" in the duplex the families shared in the English Midlands village of Olton.

Eeles told the court the Prescotts banged on the walls and doors and played their record player into the late hours. He said they shouted insults at him and his wife when they complained, pushed pieces of rubbish through his mail box and threw garbage into his garden.

The judge, Sir Desmond Ackner, said he accepted the defence argument that the Prescotts had a history of mental illness and "took a positive delight in tormenting their immediate neighbors, and none were more immediate than you or your wife."

Blind Lawyer Gets Eichmann Reward

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — A $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann has finally been paid, 15 years after the event, to a blind, 70-year-old Jewish lawyer.

The Tel Aviv newspaper Maariv reported Tuesday the money was paid to Lotar Herman, now living in Argentina, and a former prisoner of Dachau concentration camp in the Second World War.

In 1957, Herman informed the Frankfurt prosecutor general, Fritz Bauer, that he knew the whereabouts of Eichmann, whose son had fallen in love with his daughter.

Bauer passed the information to Israeli authorities, but Herman's description appeared to be incorrect and the search was dropped.

Two years later, the blind lawyer wrote to Tuvia Friedman of Haifa, who has made it his life's work to track down Nazi war criminals still at large.

The information, relayed to Israeli authorities, led to the abduction of Eichmann from Argentina to Israel, where he was placed on trial in Jerusalem in 1961 and hanged a year later.

AL BAILEY SAYS:
QUESTION: How do you get old fashioned crackling on a leg of pork when you cook it at 275 to 280 deg. F.?
ANSWER: Roast your leg of pork at not over 280 deg. for three quarters of the total cooking time — then set your dial at 400 deg. for the last quarter. This will give you seventy-five per cent of the juicy tender benefits of the low temperature — and still produce the desirable crisp crackling.

EVIDENCE CRAWLED OVER COURT, JUDGE

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (UPI) — The judge and clerk did their best to maintain courtroom decorum, but it was a little hard with a bag of evidence crawling all over them.

After a paper bag of birdseed was introduced at a theft trial, a small army of weevils marched out and headed directly for the bench.

"I felt something crawling over my arm and I looked down at the table and there were all these bugs," said clerk Mrs. Pat Fink. "I began brushing them off on to the floor and stomping on them as discreetly as I could.

"I looked up and saw Judge (Charles) Franich doing the same thing. He told me later he was sure they were crawling all over him under his robe."

Following a brief recess, the package was patched with tape and sealed in a heavy plastic bag. But the weevils ate their way out again in the clerk's evidence locker so the judge ordered Mrs. Fink to find a sealed metal can for the birdseed.

The defendant was convicted but the birdseed is still at the Santa Cruz county courthouse today awaiting the outcome of possible appeals.

Anti-Hijack Program Promised by Pilots

WINNIPEG (CP) — C. H. Simpson of Montreal, president of the Canadian Airline Pilots Association (CALPA), said Tuesday a ground security program designed to deter potential hijackers may be in full operation at most Canadian international airports by mid-1973.

He said in his president's report to CALPA's annual meeting the proposed program will be superior to those in operation in many countries "but still short of CALPA's desired goal in establishing adequate security."

"We must continue to press our government to take the strongest possible stand . . . for a treaty that will guarantee protection against the growing menace of air piracy."

Captain Simpson, a pilot with Air Canada, later told reporters Canada has been late in establishing a ground security program at airports but is quickly catching up.

The proposed program, developed after discussions between the department of transport and the association, will include specially-trained airport guards, searches of hand-baggage and metal-detection devices.

In addition "we have a lot of other things we're not talking about at all," Captain Simpson said.

Asked about additional measures, he said the 2,000-member association is primarily concerned about effective operation of the new security program and quick adoption of new methods which might be available later.

Captain Simpson also said the association welcomes the Cuban government's decision to prosecute three men accused of hijacking a Southern Airlines jet to Cuba nine days ago.

She Concedes Men Are Humans

By LINDA DEUTSCH

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "I am a moderate in the lesbian movement," says author Sidney Abbott. "I have a lingering point of view that men are human beings."

Most lesbians are bored with men, says Miss Abbott, a self-proclaimed homosexual who has written a book on the subject along with the woman she lives with.

The book, Sappho was a Right-On Woman, deals with lesbianism and feminism, a touchy subject in women's lib circles.

Miss Abbott and co-author Barbara Love insist that gay lib and women's lib have a lot in common.

"Lesbians are the proof that women may want men, but they don't need men," says Miss Abbott. "We survive and do very well. If we exist, I think the feminists would have had to invent us — to prove women could do without men."

Most feminists shun the association, she concedes, because they fear all women's libberationists will be branded lesbians.

LIFE IS PAINFUL

"Before women knew there were lesbians in the movement," says Miss Abbott, "men were saying, 'Oh, it's a bunch of dikes.'

"As long as the movment was afriad of the word 'dike,' she adds, "I think they would have limited their activities. . . . It is vital for the feminist movement totally to accept lesbians, and I don't mean go to bed with a woman." Such acceptance, she says, would make it "a truly revolutionary movement."

However, the author concedes that life as an acknowledged lesbian is filled with pain, ostracism and guilt.

Her book, she says, is aimed at helping women homosexuals to adjust. "We wanted to have something that women could send to their mothers and fathers and have as a platform for discussion."

Miss Abbott is the daughter of an army officer, graduate of Smith College and Columbia University Graduate School of Urban Planning. Now 35, she recalls that as recently as 1969, "I was scared to death to admit I wouldn't be married, even though I was a lesbian."

Younger lesbians, says Miss Abbott, may meet with less social displeasure in the future.

"Psychologists rapidly are endorsing homosexuality as a valid life style," she says and speaks hopefully of a "supermarket of sexuality in the future" when odd sexual preferences won't incur social disapproval.

Soviets Advance New Image

New York Times

PRAGUE — The Russians are offering Czechoslovaks an opportunity to see the Soviet Union in a new light — as a modern society bursting with attractive consumer goods and handsomely dressed young people.

This new image is expressed in a Soviet exhibition, the largest ever mounted in Eastern Europe, that has drawn on the talents and imagination of Czechoslovak artists to offer a swinging picture of Soviet life.

The challenge facing the organizers was considerable. For one thing, there is still deep resentment over the Soviet-led invasion by Warsaw Pack forces in 1968, when orthodox Communism was reimposed here in place of the reforms undertaken by Alexander Dubcek, then the party leader.

The 60,000 Soviet troops that remain are a constant preoccupation for many Czechs.

The exhibition's organizers also had to cope with a sophisticated audience, wise in the ways of consumer products. That attitude was summed up by a woman who scanned Soviet industrial goods just inside the entrance and growled, "We were making this stuff before they ever heard of it."

Nonetheless, the exhibition which honors the 50th anniversary of the Russian revolution, seems to be overcoming at least some — perhaps a good part — of the resentment and skepticism.

Westerners familiar with major Soviet exhibitions say this is the most attractive they have seen. It relies heavily on special lighting, automated displays and other electronic innovations.

For example, a multimedia fashion show presented hourly begins as a film show, in color, on five screens — one in the center that occasionally offers two and three images, one on each side and two above.

The plot depicts a young Czech arriving in Moscow and seeing many of its sights with the casual assistance of an unlikely taxi driver — an attractive woman modishly outfitted — and other smart young Muscovites.

The actors appear on the stage several times, modeling the outfits while the screened action continues around them. At times they seem to emerge from the plot and to respond to it.

The technique, developed by the Czechoslovaks more than a decade ago attracted large and enthusiastic crowds at world's fairs in Brussels, New York and Montreal.

The tens of thousands of Czechoslovaks who file through the halls are offered a dazzling array of Soviet products, some of them — bright-colored and patterned men's shirts, a full range of top-quality electronic items and modern kitchenware — apparently unavailable in Moscow or too costly for most Russians.

Simple maintenance work includes brake adjustment

Automotive Club instructor Bill Conconi explains engine to absorbed audience

GIRLS TUNE IN TO CAR TROUBLE

Girls at Mount Douglas Senior Secondary are learning automobile mechanics.

More than 80 girls have signed up for the school's Automotive Club, held Tuesdays and Thursdays after school. Club members are learning to tune up automobiles and perform simple repairs.

The idea for the club came from the girls themselves. They asked instructor Bill Conconi for a course similar to the mini course in automotive mechanics offered girls at Victoria Senior Secondary in 1971.

He agreed to give the course to student volunteers after regular school hours.

"If this group does well the school board may allow us to give the course for credit next year," Conconi said.

Conconi was surprised by the heavy enrolment: "I thought that at most maybe 15 girls would sign up."

He says the girls don't have as much general knowledge of cars as boys the same age. But they make up for lack of mechanical background with enthusiasm and curiosity.

Conconi teaches the girls simple maintenance jobs such as oil changing, greasing and brake adjustment. He also shows them how to spot and replace worn out parts.

Work is done free of charge and the club always has a good supply of cars, owned by students and teachers.

The school buys grease, oil and some car parts at wholesale prices and charges owners for materials used to service their cars.

Conconi explained that when a car needs a new part, the owner usually buys the part and brings it to the power shop with his car.

Some members surveyed by The Times obviously distrust the automotive industry.

Kathy Cowen, 16, says club members are "learning to be wise about cars so that gas stations can't put one over on us."

Paula Mannie, 16, signed up for the club so that she "won't get taken" when she buys a car.

"We're learning all about cars in general, not just one model," Miss Mannie said.

Club members also learn what parts need to be examined every 1,000 miles, such as air filters.

One enthusiastic student had trouble describing the work in mechanical terms.

"We learned how to put things in wheels," she said.

Synthetics May Bite Into Meat Market

LONDON (Reuter) — Steak a la test tube, chicken a la laboratory — the science fiction menu is coming closer to reality.

With meat prices rising almost everywhere, scientists around the world are looking more and more towards simulated meats and other synthetic foodstuffs.

The idea is far from new. At least 25 firms in the United States are producing artificial meat, mostly from soybean flour, and Japan is reported to turn out some 24,000 tons a year.

In Britain, a major textile group has just begun marketing a synthetic meat made from bean protein which is spun like yarn. They say the fibrous texture makes it much more realistic and enjoyable than the American product.

But nobody expects a sudden revolution in eating habits, a quick culinary coup d'etat. For one thingk the artificial meat is often just as expensive or more so than the authentic product.

Courtaulds, the British textile firm, is so far offering its product only to the catering trade and stresses that it is an altrnative, not a substitute, for the real things.

One guest at a recent public tasting sampled a concoction called a kesp kromeskie — artificial meat wrapped in bacon, butter-dipped and deep fried — and declared:

"I am completely unmoved by this alleged breakthrough."

He turned out to be an interloper from the National Federation of Meat Traders.

In Australia, the opposition to artificial meat has reached Parliament, where Robert Bonnett urged import restrictions to protect the domestic market, warning that manufacturers of synthetic meat planned a major effort to capture a big bite of the world meat market.

Many scientists believe it is essential to develop new ways of producing protein-rich synthetic food in the face of expanding populations and shrinking arable land.

Another big British combine, Rank's Hovis - McDougall, has just set up an experimental pilot plant which can produce up to two tons a week of a "golden fungus" called A3-5.

The yellowish-brown powder can be used as a meat substitute or as a protein additive. The company says it contains twice as much high quality protein as good beef steak.

Artificial milk has been promised from fish pulp, cabbage leaves and peapods.

But perhaps the least memorable substitute was announced in 1948 by Dr. Robert Aries, a professor at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, New York. He said he could make good, cheap whisky from sawdust and oil refinery wastes. It has yet to hit the market.

Divorce Should Divide Wealth Equally—Report

EDMONTON (CP) Property accumulated during marriage should be divided equally in any divorce settlement, recommends an interim report on the status of women tabled this week in the legislature.

The report, tabled by Helen Hunley, minister without portfolio, endorses "the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada recommendation that provinces amend their laws in order to recognize the concept of equal partnership in marriage. . ."

It said each spouse has an equal right to any assets, except gifts or inheritance, accumulated during marriage.

The report was prepared by a citizens' advisory board formed in May, 1971, to study the federal commission's recommendations and to conduct public hearings. Miss Hunley, asked outside the house when a final report might be available, replied:

"Surely you don't expect there to ever be a final report on the status of women. I would hope that it would be constantly changing — for the better, of course!"

The interim report also recommended that family planning information be made more readily available to the public and that "immediate research and action" be taken to improve day care service for children.

"The changing status of women in the province is largely an education problem," the board said in its report" . . . the textbooks (in schools) themselves perpetuate many male-female attitudes, detrimental to improving the status of women."

As well, career counselling in schools and manpower centres often encouraged women to take up the "more socially acceptable" jobs instead of going "into their area of best endeavor."

"The citizens' advisory board," it concluded, "suggests continuation of an advisory board or committee which would serve women's specific needs and work either with the human rights commission or the executive council."

High School to Clear Up District

Students of Mount View Senior Secondary School will hold an area cleanup on Sunday, Nov. 26, starting at 11 a.m.

Streets and yards within a half-mile radius of the school, at 3314 Carey, will be cleaned, and papers, bottles and other materials will be picked up at homes if they are packed and ready to go.

The students are hoping that parents will participate, volunteering their car or truck to pick up packed garbage at designated spots.

Posters Put Fire in Its Place

Third-grader Doris Dardenzo depicts flaming house

Rosa Lopetrone's spelling isn't perfect yet.

And the 7-year-old Grade 1 Oaklands School student has a rather fuzzy image of a fireman.

But the message in her painting was dead on: "Know your fire department phone number — 384-1122."

Rosa was awarded first prize of the Grade 1 competitors in an art competition on fire safety in the home, sponsored by the Victoria Fire Department and the Victoria School Board.

Awards were presented this week to six children in primary grades.

Arthur King, a Grade 1 student at Richmond School, was awarded second prize for his message — "Stop Fire."

Grade 2 winners were: Barry Clarke, of St. Andrew's School, first prize for — "Keep Fire in its Place; Geraldine Agrey, of Oakland School, second prize for — "Keep matches out of children's reach."

Grade 3 winning entries were: "Don't Panic in a Fire," by Doris Dardengo, of St. Andrew's School, and "Piles of Junk getting higher, can start to burn and cause a fire," by Kirsten Meyer, of James Bay School.

All 150 entries showed children in primary grades have captured the rules of fire safety, said Chief Inspector Arthur Leason, of the Victoria Fire Department, prevention branch, who was one of the judges.

Asked where their ideas came from, most of the children shrugged and said, the ideas "just came."

Leason attributed the messages to a fire safety education program, operated by the fire department which tours city schools.

"We judged the entries on the safety in the home message. And even if the child's message was simply — don't play with matches — it proves safety is a part of his little mind," Leason said.

Leason rated electrical appliance fires as holding the number one spot for causing home fires.

"Smokers' carelessness would have to be rated second, and accumulation of rubbish and flammable liquid, third."

"Keep fire your friend, not your enemy," by David Clarke of St. Andrew's School, received honorable mention and David will get his own personal message from the fire chief as a prize.

Victoria Coal and Heating Ltd. donated portable radios for prizes.

dear abby

What's to 'Make Up'?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been happily married for 25 years, and he is the dearest thing on this earth to me. I have tried in every way to be a good wife, but I have failed him in the most important way of all. For some mysterious reason I have not been able to give him children.

I was never able to get him to consider adoption. He hasn't complained, but I can see the hurt in his eyes when he sees his friends with their children and grandchildren, and my heart aches so.

What can I do to make it up to him?—Hurting.

DEAR HURTING: If you've had a good marriage (and you obviously have), what is there to "make up"? Don't assume that you weren't able to give him children. (Perhaps he wasn't able to give you children.) It's history now, so stop grieving for something you never had. God in his infinite wisdom gives and withholds both happiness and tragedy. Accept His decision, and don't question it.

The department of labor has published a series of bilingual information pamphlets to explain the present Canadian Labor Standards. This Labor Code is not only of interest to every Canadian, but especially to newcomers and to those about to enter the labor force.

Pamphlet 1 is a summary of the code and explains that it covers employees in those enterprises which come under federal jurisdiction, such as inter-provincial railways, banks, Crown corporations and similar organizations.

The code specifies standards with regard to working hours, minimum wages, annual vacations, general holidays, maternity leave, severance pay, etc.

Pamphlet 2 answers some frequently asked questions with regard to minimum wages. You will see, for instance, the special provisions made for employees under 17 years of age as well as for apprentices, trainees and handicapped persons.

For either pamphlet write to: Information Division, Canada Department of Labor, Ottawa, Ontario K1A OJ2.

Santa to Sail

At dawn on Saturday, December 16, when the Junior Chamber of Commerce Santa Clause ship moves out from the Inner Harbor, it will be the 10th Christmas it has sailed off to bring the Yuletide to isolated settlements in the San Juan and Gulf Islands.

In bad weather and good, through storms and calms, the Jaycees' ship, with a lighted Christmas tree at its mast, has sailed into many lonely harbors and land-locked bays.

And no matter what time it arrived the children were there to greet it.

Travels by Ship

Last year, Santa Claus, who always travels with the ship, produced Christmas gifts (mainly toys) from heavily laden pack, for 1,350 youngsters.

According to Glyn Williams, a Jaycee vice-president, it is expected there will be 1,500 waiting for Santa this time around.

If these children are not to be disappointed; if their one chance of experiencing a visit from Santa during this present Christmas season is to be a success, then the Jaycees need help.

"Fifteen hundred kids is a sizeable number," Williams says. "We'll need hundreds of toys and lots of candy."

That's why he and his fellow members are appealing to the Victoria public to help them take this year's Santa ship out so well laden not a single child will be left out.

What is needed? Good new toys and games for youngsters, mainly between the ages of 2 and 11 years. Or used toys of any kind, all in good condition, of course.

To make it easier for those who wish to give, The Bay has decorated a Christmas tree on the second floor near the escalator and close to the door leading out into the car park.

You can drop your toy donations into a box close to that tree, any time while the store is open.

Or, if you prefer, here's a phone number you can call and your gifts will be picked up immediately. It's 384-1914. Deadline for all donations is December 14.

Why do the Jaycees keep up this custom of designating a weekend to go out into winter weather, risk sea sickness and come home tired out in the early hours of a Monday morning to gulp down a cup of coffee and go straight to their every-day work?

Glyn Williams gives one good reason in this story of last year's Santa ship.

Children Wait

Seems it was due in at a place called Shell Beach at 2 o'clock on the Saturday afternoon. Word had gone ahead to that effect. Nevertheless, the children began converging on the wharf a good hour or so ahead.

It was a stormy day, laced with wind and rain. High waves buffeted the Santa ship. And it was increasingly evident she could not reach Shell Beach on time.

"Indeed," Williams says, "we knew we would be two to three hours late in getting there."

By radio telephone, back and forth across the storm-swept waters, word of the delay went to the little settlement, giving the new time of arrival.

The children were told and an effort made to send them home until the ship came into the wharf. Not one of them would leave.

"Those kids were not dressed for the winter weather," Williams said. "None of them had coats. Most wore only running shoes, overalls and sweathers. There was an occasional wool cap.

"They were cold and wet when we pulled in but still waiting patiently for that visit from Santa Claus."

So Important

You can see from this one story (Glyn Williams has others in the same vein) why it is so important for the Jaycees and their Santa ship to continue calling at isolated settlements in the San Juan and Gulf Islands.

You who live in warm homes where Christmas decorations will soon glitter and shine, you whose children are warmly dressed and where a visit from Santa Claus means a wealth of toys under the Christmas tree think for a minute of those shivering youngsters on a bleak wharf, waiting for their one and only glimpse of Santa.

Then do go out and help the Jaycees to fill this year's Santa Claus ship to over-flowing, so there will not be one disappointed youngster the weekend of December 16.

Cookies Will Keep—If Hidden

By MARY MOORE

Be on the lookout for Christmas cookies today and in the near future. I am in the cookie business: Swedish or thumbprint cookies, German pfeffernusse (pepper nuts), butterfingers and pecan crisps will all turn up soon. The first three are keepers and ideal for Christmas baking now if you have a safe hiding place and good tight cookie boxes.

Pfeffernusse are today's specialty for the sake of our readers whose ancestors came from Germany.

Pfeffernusse (pepper nuts) Christmas favorites

PFEFFERNUSSE
(100 pepper nuts)

One cup butter;

One cup sugar;

Four eggs;

Two cups stirred but unsifted all-purpose flour;

One-half teaspoon salt;

One-half teaspoon baking soda;

One teaspoon black pepper (yes—1 tsp. is correct)

One teaspoon nutmeg;

One teaspoon cloves;

One teaspoon allspice;

Two teaspoons cinnamon;

One-quarter teaspoon crushed cardamon seeds (see below);

One teaspoon crushed anise seeds (or 3 or 4 drops anise oil);

One-half cup ground blanched almonds;

One-half cup chopped candied cotton citron or orange peel;

Grated rind 4 lemons.

If you are not familiar with cardamon it comes in pods which you break open (like a peanut) and little black seeds fall out. Crush these (and the anise seeds) by pounding gently with the rolling pin. They are a characteristic flavor of pfeffernusse.

Into a beater bowl put ingredients in order given, starting beaters on low as soon as butter and sugar are measured in and continuing beating until all ingredients are added. Use about one heaped-up measuring teaspoon for each cookie, placing them two inches apart on greased cookie sheet. (They spread to about two inches in diameter.) Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. about 9 minutes. Do not overbake.

Cool on cake racks and store in single layers, separated by sheets of wax paper, in covered cookie tin. These will keep for weeks and weeks—if hidden.

Write to Mary Moore, 32 Churchill Ave., Hamilton, Ont., enclosing stamped self-addressed envelope and 10 cents for each specified recipe.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Forecast for Thurs., Nov. 23, 1972

BY SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Past obligations must be cleared before embarking on new project. Obstacles abound. Key is to take over-all view. Be realistic. You may have to give up something in order to take definite step forward.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hold off on journey if practical. Steer clear of needless disputes with relatives, neighbors. Realize that what is far away is not necessarily desirable. You become familiar with some hard facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be especially cautious now in connection with financial transactions. Don't mix money and friendship. Otherwise, you could lose both — guard assets. Unscrupulous individual may want something for nothing — from you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What was secure could be subject to change, revision. Key now is to ride with tide. Means be flexible. Utilize alternatives. You hold trump card. But many around you are envious. Go slow while aiming toward objective.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't be too sure of facts until you double-check. Key now is to slow pace, to be thorough, to review past and to fortify plans for future. Aquarius, Scorpio persons could play prominent roles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Not wise to depend on friends, promises. Do your own analyzing. Key is to perceive, to synthesize information. Accept need for change. Those who tell you "stories" may actually be on fishing expedition.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those who seem to have authority may actually be powerless. Check directions. Family member may not be of more aid than professional associate. Keep open mind. Conflict exists but you are due to win.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be willing to wait. What is offered now is merely a test. Show strength by demanding money's worth. Message will be clarified. Pisces could play key role. See persons, situations in realistic light.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What you need to know may be withheld. Key is to look behind the scenes. Be discreet. Trust older individual. Experience can become your ally. Become familiar with value of products. Avoid one who talks of get-rich-quick scheme.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Finish project. Find better ways of distribution. Get message across. Advertise and publicize. Take special care in legal area. Obtain expert counsel. Aries individual can provide aid.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb., 18): You're ready for fresh start. You could get proverbial second chance. There is test, challenge and obstacle. But you are capable of overcoming. Key is to stick to your own style and to adhere to basic beliefs.

PISCES (Fed. 19-March 20): Emotions tend to dominate. Strive to be logical, especially where members of opposite sex are concerned. You may be in for surprise. One who appeared very interested could prove fickle. Bring forth sense of humor.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are attractive to opposite sex, you are fond of travel and your mind is moving even when you are quiet. You have natural attributes of searcher for truth. This past September marked significant event for you. In 1973, your efforts will be appreciated and you will receive greater recognition.

Brazil Licks Inflation

By BRUCE HANDLER

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — Brazil's brand of wage and price controls has checked an inflation that was once heading for the skies.

"Nobody in the world has done it quite like Brazil," says a U.S. diplomat specializing in economic affairs. "Inflation is built into the economy. Yet there has been fantastic growth, and no one sector seems to be suffering."

Because Brazil is run by a tough, economy-minded, military regime, the people are obliged to comply with the rules of the economic game. Open opposition to economic policy is not tolerated.

Strikes are illegal, except when the government approves them. Unions and employers dicker over pay increases, but the government makes the final ruling and that's that. It works the same way with prices. Farmers, manufacturers and consumers all have their say, but the state gets the last word.

CHECK INFLATION

Inflation this year will be around 15 per cent, the government predicts. This seems astoundingly high. But Brazil's inflation was rising by nearly 90 per cent a year before the armed forces took over in 1964.

It should be less this year than that of most other South American countries. It fell to 18 per cent in 1971 from 21 per cent in 1970, and the government has set a goal of 10 per cent by 1974.

Every May the president decrees an increase in the federally-controlled minimum wage, currently around $40 a month. The idea is to stay slightly ahead of or at least keep pace with the rise in the cost of living from the previous year.

Some retail prices are set by decree. Others—for example, the current five-cent cost of a small cup of coffee in Rio's thousands of standup bars—are determined after negotiations between a government agency and the bar owners.

Retailers who charge too much are subject to fines and, in extreme cases, closure.

To make wage and price controls effective, Brazil also had to put other aspects of its once chaotic economy in order. The regime has balanced the budget, increased foreign trade, collected more taxes, boosted industrial production and encouraged people to put their money in the bank or invest it in the stock market.

Lloyds and Bolsa International Bank Ltd. of London, which has long experience in Latin America, recently congratulated the Brazilian government for its "skilful management of monetary and fiscal policies."

GRANT GRAFT CHARGED

TORONTO (CP) — A Toronto mining man and a former federal government official were remanded today until Jan. 8 when they appeared in court on charges in connection with incentive grants for mining companies.

Norman Cooper, president of Silver Shield Mines Inc. and the subsidiary Jacques Cartier Mint Inc., is charged with "unlawful conferring an advantage or benefit" on a civil servant to whom he was applying for incentive grants.

Gerald McKendry, former director of the incentives branch of the regional economic expansion department, is charged with accepting such a benefit from Cooper.

Both men were remanded without plea and released on their own recognizance.

Cooper's companies were awarded grants totalling $737,000 last sring to assist in construction of a silvper refinery and private mint on the site of Silver Shield's mine at Cobalt, Ont. The grants were withdrawn earlier this month.

The Ontario Securities Commission Monday banned trading in Silver Shield shares indefinitely.

Europe Recognizes Canadian Music Group

By The Canadian Press

One of Canada's top vocal-instrumental groups, the Stampeders, now is on tour in Europe and the six concerts the group performed in the Netherlands were well received.

Two concerts with the Stampeders as headliners were given in Amsterdam and they also headlined performances in Rotterdam, Venlo, Assen and Leeuwarden.

The Amsterdam newspaper De Volkskrant described the trio as "a top Canadian group strongly on their way to gain international stardom." De Telegraaf, the Amsterdam newspaper with the largest circulation, devoted a full page to the touring group.

From the Netherlands the Stampeders were to proceed to France for four more concerts, then to return to Amsterdam for a Dutch television special. Later they are scheduled to perform in Germany, Switzerland, Belgium and Britain.

The Stampeders won the 1971 Juno award in the vocal-instrumental category and another 1971 award for the best-produced record of the year, Sweet City Woman. The awards are based on a poll of Canadian newspaper critics, radio and television stations, recording companies and record retail-sales outlets.

During the Stampeders' European tour, it was announced they have won an Edison Award for 1972 for quality and artistic achievement in the record industry. The award was for their album called The Stampeders.

The awards are voted on by the European recording industry.

The Stampeders began nine years ago as a six-man group from Calgary. In 1966 they moved to Eastern Canada, making their headquarters in Toronto.

The group now consists of three performers: Rich Dodson, guitarist, bass and song writer; Ronnie King, base, guitarist, song writer and comic, and Kim Berly, drums, guitar, song writer and actor.

They write their own material.

India Sells Arms

NEW DELHI (AP) — The Indian government says it has sold $8.72 million worth of military equipment to other countries, and the sales are not inconsistent with India's objections to the international arms race. The minister for defence production. V. C. Shukla, told Parliament many of the military exports were non-lethal, such as tents and transport.

Stained Glass Art Revived

By DONNA CLEMENTS
Times Staff

MILL BAY — For the past year Michael Nuttgens of Mill Bay has been trying to revive Cowichan Valley interest in the traditional stained glass art.

Although many people associate stained glass windows with churches and religion, Nuttgens, 44, feels the coming thing should be stained glass windows in foyers of large buildings, as dividers in rooms or windows in homes.

Nuttgens, who believes he is the only practising stained glass artist on Vancouver Island, learned the craft as a boy in England from his father, Joseph.

The senior Nuttgens has a series of his stained glass windows in the Christ Church Cathedral in Victoria.

After training and working with his father in London, Nuttgens went to Toronto where he worked under well-known Canadian stained glass artist Yvonne Williams for eight years.

Last year Nuttgens brought his wife Frances, who is originally from Victoria, and their five children to the Cowichan area to set up his Briarwood stained glass studio.

Nuttgens wants to work at his trade full-time but has been forced to take other jobs while the craft catches on.

"Stained glass art has to be my livelihood and not a hobby," Nuttgens said. "Outside this I am an unskilled laborer."

In the past year Nuttgens has worked as a dishwasher on the CPR Nanaimo to Vancouver ferry run, as a drapery outfitter and on a chicken farm.

Nuttgens said the art is also too expensive to be just a hobby because of the materials involved. As well as having to import the antiqued hand-blown glass from the U.S., Nuttgens said there are many other costly items involved.

Nuttgens has sold numerous eye-catching ornaments in stained glass in the area but has just completed his first commissioned window.

The window, which is for a private home, is made up of symbols from the Chilkat tribe, a West Coast Indian band.

The symbols are depicted in 260 pieces of glass outlined by lead strips.

The window, which involved two weeks of steady work, is five feet by one foot. Nuttgens fire-painted the details into the glass. He said a window of this kind would cost about $250.

Before starting on a window of this kind, Nuttgens said he first draws a design for approval and then works from a full-size drawing.

Hoo Hoo Club Gives Bursary

DUNCAN — Donald Williams of Duncan, 1971 graduate of Cowichan Senior Secondary School now enrolled in the forestry technology program at Malaspina College in Nanaimo, was recently presented with the Cowichan Valley Hoo Hoo Club's annual $250 bursary.

Wood promotion chairman Gordon Cameron said eligible to apply for the annual bursary are regular students of the college who are residents of Vancouver Island and have completed the first year of either forestry or wood products programs.

Greater Nanaimo Plans Revived

NANAIMO (CP) — Nanaimo city council has voted unanimously to ask the Nanaimo Regional District to consider holding a second amalgamation vote in the city and surrounding rural areas.

The first amalgamation referendum in June, 1970, was defeated. The proposal called for Chase River, Departure Bay, Harewood, Northfield and Wellington to join the city to form a Greater Nanaimo.

Operation Light-Up Switches On Dec. 1

DUNCAN — Operation Lite-Up for Christmas will be held in Duncan on Dec. 1.

Wayne Buck, promotion chairman for the Downtown Business Association, said the scheme is "to encourage businesses throughout Duncan to have their Christmas lights up early as well as an attempt to get everyone involved in the season's spirits."

Buck said Operation Lite-up will start at 5 p.m. when Mayor Jim Quaife turns on the lights of "Vancouver Island's largest Christmas tree at Duncan Mohawk station on the Trans-Canada Highway.

"The rest of Duncan will be lit up in 15-second intervals."

Starting Dec. 14 Duncan stores will be open until 9 p.m. nightly for Christmas shopping except on Saturdays when they will close at 5 p.m.

Charges Refunded In Dognapping Case

NANAIMO (CP) — Mrs. Neale Robinson of Nanaimo, who alleged that her dog was lured from her yard by an SPCA official, has won her case before city council and will be refunded the $11 impounding and boarding fees charged by the SPCA.

Mrs. Robinson lodged the complaint two weeks ago and provided names of four witnesses to the incident.

In investigation by the council's pound committee found the allegation was true and that the animal had in fact been "dognapped."

Wrong Body Shipped Home to Mother

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The mother of a U.S. Army private supposedly killed in a traffic accident in Germany last week said Tuesday the body sent here by the army for burial was not the body of her son.

Marcella Smith of Buffalo said she received a telegram from the army Nov. 13 informing her that her son, Pte. Lott Smith, 21, had been killed in a traffic accident that day.

On Nov. 16, Mrs. Smith received another telegram informing her that her son's body had arrived at Kennedy International Airport in New York and instructing her to make arrangements here for burial.

The body arrived the next day under military escort. When Mrs. Smith saw it, she said, it was not her son.

Other members of the family viewed the body at a funeral home and said the same thing.

Mrs. Smith has refused to sign a release stating that the body is that of her son.

SPECIALIST LAWYERS TO ADVERTISE

TORONTO (CP) — The Law Society of Upper Canada announced Tuesday that it will abolish its long-standing rule against lawyers advertising themselves as specialists in various branches of law.

Sydney L. Robins, treasurer of the law society, said lawyers will be able to advertise themselves as specialists after receiving certification in their speciality area. The certification program will probably begin late next spring.

Mr. Robins said the rigidly enforced rule is being thrown out in order to end the public's confusion over how to pick the right lawyer for a specific task.

He said specialization probably should take place first in the fields of criminal, bankruptcy, admiralty and labor law.

Other areas suitable for specialization, he said, are taxation, patents and trade marks, wills and trusts, family law, civil litigation and real estate.

A lawyer should be required to spend five years in a specialized field before being considered for certification, Mr. Robins said.

The society is the governing body for Ontario's 8,000-member legal profession.

Astronauts in Rehearsal For Apollo 17 Moon Shot

By HOWARD BENEDICT

CAPE KENNEDY (AP) — With the last major preflight test completed, the Apollo 17 astronauts today rehearse blasting off from the moon and docking their two spaceships, America and Challenger.

Eugene Cernan and geologist Harrison Schmitt plan to spend much of the day in the lunar module simulator while Ronald Evans operate the command ship trainer, running through the complex lunar liftoff procedures they have practiced scores of time.

Involved is the precisely-timed takeoff from the moon and two hours of manoeuvres by Cernan and Schmitt to catch and link up with Evans in the command vehicle.

All three astronauts boarded the command ship America atop a Saturn V rocket Tuesday night for the final 2½ hours of a trial countdown which ended successfully with simulated launching of the rocket at 9:53 p.m. EST.

That's the same time scheduled for the liftoff of the big booster Dec. 6 on the final Apollo moon-landing journey. It will be the first after-dark launching of a U.S. manned space flight and is expected to attract nearly one million spectators to the area.

Among those expected are 81 ambassadors to the United States, 200 congressmen, 59 foreign dignitaries and 2,000 reporters.

Launch director Walter Kapryan termed Tuesday night's test "perfectly normal."

Crews now will concentrate on preparing the rocket and two spaceships for the actual countdown, a six-day exercise due to start Nov. 30.

Cernan, Schmitt and Evans plan to spend considerable time in the simulators, rehearsing critical phases of the nearly 13-day journey.

On Dec. 11, Cernan and Schmitt are to steer the lunar lander Challenger to a touchdown in a narrow, mountain - ringed moon valley named Taurus-Littrow on the southeast rim of the Sea of Serenity.

There they hope to find rocks only 100 million years old and some that might date back 4.5 billion years to the origin of the moon.

Nfld. May Export Distinctive Screech

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The distinctive Newfoundland rums, Screech, bottled in Newfoundland may eventually be sold in other provinces, Finance Minister John C. Crosbie said Tuesday.

Crosbie told a service club luncheon the government may attempt to sell Screech and Newman's Port elsewhere in Canada, but gave no further details.

The minister mentioned the two beverages while reviewing operations of the Newfoundland Liquor Corp., a government body that controls sale of all alcoholic beverages in the province.

Newman's Port has been available here for more than a century. Legend says a wine shipment destined for England from Portugal spent some time in Newfoundland and upon arrival at its destination was found to have an improved bouquet. However, historians and company spokesmen have said several times in recent years the legend is groundless.

Screech, once an unlabelled cheap, raw rum from the bottom of the barrel, received its name from servicemen during the Second World War and now the name is official.

Pollution Interest Lags—Study

OTTAWA (CP) — Because Canada's air pollution problems are mainly local and temporary, it is hard to sustain interest in ways to solve them, says a background study for the Science Council released Tuesday.

Dr. R. E. Munn, chief scientist of the environment department's air quality branch, says in the 39-page booklet that Canada still has time to look at air quality and, more importantly, to plan for total cleanup.

"Quick engineering solutions suitable for application to small components of an ecosystem may treat the symptoms without curing the causes of environmental degradation," he says.

It is important that ecological systems be examined in total and that ways be found to deal with the basic causes, not just answers to an immediate and local problem, he says.

Canada's present air problems are mainly local.

"Only on rare occasions does air quality deteriorate seriously in our large cities . . . but within a few days clean air from Canada's northland invariably sweeps into the region, dissipating awareness again."

Despite this, Dr. Munn predicts in the preface, "the most pressing Canadian air pollution problems of the next few decades will be regional in nature."

It would have been relatively easy 100 years ago to preserve areas of parkland in major cities, although that is just about impossible now, he says. Now is the time to plan for greenbelts around metropolitan areas and the separation of industrial and residential areas.

Dr. Munn says the study was written "for the non-specialist." It provides definitions of terms used in describing air pollution and outlines some recent developments at the national and international level.

It does not offer any conclusions nor any recommendations.

It was one of the background papers prepared for the science council's report last June on the environment, It's Not Too Late Yet.

That report goes farther than Dr. Munn does, for it recommended: "We should get on with the job of regulation, developing control of emissions and carefully planning disposal systems for the smallest amount of residues."

$1.7 Billion Invested In Canada Bond Series

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadians had poured $1,742,000,000 in spare cash and pledges into the new series of Canada Savings Bonds by close of business Tuesday night, the finance department announced.

That total was down from the record investment of $2,335,000,000 in the 1971-72 series at the same time last year, but up from the previous record of $1,125,000,000 in 1969. The 1970 investment had reached $1,047,000,000 by Nov. 20 that year.

Total sales of the new bonds amounted to $1,929,000,000 by Tuesday night. But after allowing for previous bond issues cashed in since the beginning of October, the net new cash invested and pledged amounted to $1,742,000,000.

Purchases under payroll savings plans, whereby employees buy a bond by instalments through paycheque deductions, reached a record $344 million this fall, the department said. That was up from $304 million last year.

TOTAL UP $1 BILLION

In all, Canadians hold more than $10 billion worth of both old and new Canada Savings Bonds, up by more than $1 billion in a year.

The new series, which went on sale Oct. 2, carries interest coupons that will yield the purchaser an average $7.30 a year on each $100 invested if held without cashing any coupons to maturity through 12 years to 1984.

Last year's bonds yield an average $7.19 per $100 if held for their full term of nine years.

The record yield was the average $8 a year on $100 in the 1969 series, which had a full term of nine years.

The current series was on sale without a lateness penalty to Nov. 15. Now a small premium above face value must be paid on purchase to make up for interest already accumulated.

Young Man 'From God' Kneels Beside Anne

LONDON (AP) — A young man claiming to be "from God" slipped through tight security around a London church Tuesday and knelt beside Princess Anne.

The man, wearing sneakers and a white sweater, made two attempts to enter the Church of St.-Martin-in-the-Fields at Trafalgar Square, before finally getting through.

Princess Anne was attending a memorial service to Uffa Fox, yachtsman friend of her father, Prince Philip. Fox, who taught Prince Charles to sail, died last week aged 74.

The young intruder took his place in the pew alongside Anne, Prince Philip and Prince Charles toward the end of the service which was also attended by Prime Minister Edward Heath.

Prince Philip's private detective was immediately put on the alert. The young man was quietly hustled out through a side entrance. Police said later the youth had done nothing wrong and had been released. His name was not made public.

'Creative Hassling' Advocated by Law Reform Body Officer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lawyer Arthur Close, legal research officer for the British Columbia Law Reform Commission, is instructing disgruntled consumers in the finer points of what he calls creative hassling.

Creative hassling is not legal, but it's not illegal either. And Mr. Close says that while the ability to raise an effective fuss may not always get you your money back, satisfaction is guaranteed.

At the first session of a free course on consumer law offered by the Vancouver People's Law School, Mr. Close said Monday many large companies are more sensitive to public complaint than they are to a letter to the president.

"More people should be picketing and taking other forms of informal action," he said.

Mr. Close, who practised law in Vancouver before joining the commission six months ago, said individuals should press legal action where possible or desirable, but they should not always rule out extraplegal methods.

"Most people are content to take their lumps rather than complain too loudly. That's why the rip-off artists get their own way so much."

Mr. Close said letter-writing was effective if you mailed your complaint to the right person. Outline your beef to the city licensing inspector rather than to the company president. The company won't get its licence lifted, but it will certainly get the feeling it's being watched.

"Another way: If you've been ripped off by a company, try to find out where they get their financing," he suggested. "Then buy a few shares in the bank and write a fruity letter to the president of the bank saying that as a shareholder you don't think the bank should be lending money to firms that do not appreciate the new trends of consumerism.

"Threaten to bring this matter up at the next annual meeting. The last thing bank presidents want is someone jumping up at the annual meeting raising peripheral issues."

Potato New Villain In Birth Malformity?

LONDON (Reuter) — British scientists are taking an urgent look at the common potato—at least the discolored ones—as a possible cause of two of the most prevalent forms of birth defects.

Fresh laboratory evidence has just come to light indicating that eating blighted potatoes during early pregnancy may lead to the birth of babies suffering from spina bifida or anencephaly.

Spina bifida is a malformation at the base of the spinal cord which, even after an operation, leaves a child crippled for life and facing an early death. Anencephaly is a skull and brain defect usually fatal within the first few days of birth.

The alarm was raised this summer by Dr. James Renwick, a geneticist and biomedical researcher at London's School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine.

He published his hypothesis on the link between diseased potatoes and birth defects in a medical journal, citing cases where the incidence of spina bifida and anencephaly had risen markedly some 18 months after potato blight had hit a given area.

GOVERNMENT ACTS

The British health department at first scoffed at the idea, saying Renwick's paper "does not contain convincing evidence."

Then, in Parliament, Health Secretary Sir Keith Joseph sounded a more cautious note when asked about the supposed link. Without supporting the theory, he warned that potatoes which are diseased, decayed or discolored should be thrown away and damaged portions of other potatoes should be cut out.

Newspapers seized on the warning with a spate of mildly alarmed articles, and Renwick weighed in with another article stressing that even if this theory proved wrong, the British government should take it seriously and investigate.

Finally, the povernment acted. The health department announced that it and its outside scientific advisers were making an urgent study of the suggested relationship between potato blight and birth defects.

The announcement stressed that the evidence so far did no more than raise suspicion and "casts no doubt on healthy potatoes."

Women Taking Over Realty

TORONTO (CP) — Women now constitute almost one-third of the sales force in the Toronto real estate market, says the chairman-elect of the women's division of the Toronto Real Estate Board.

Dora Hamilton said in an interview that this proportion probably will increase as more and more women seem to be attracted to the real estate business.

Mrs. Hamilton recalled that 10 years ago only about one sales representative in seven was a woman.

But she cautioned women interested in a real estate career that there is hard work involved.

"Women shouldn't come into real estate expecting it to be a series of social events. They should be prepared to give their very best to the work."

Mrs. Hamilton, mother of one daughter, said: "Some of the top producers in real estate sales in Toronto are women."

'Bums in Politics' Must Go—Givens

TORONTO (CP)—Former Toronto mayor Philip Givens thinks it's time to tighten the critiria for public office.

He said he suspects that of the 200 jobs up for grabs in the Dec. 4 municipal election in Metropolitan Toronto, only one-quarter will be filled by capable people.

"All you have to do to run for public office is get yourself nominated, you don't have to have any discipline or training, just the knack of getting yourself elected and of knowing how to kiss people's feet," he said in an interview.

Mr. Givens, now member of the Ontario legislature for York West, said sensitive, educated people are seldom prepared for the abuse of public life.

"We all get so righteous and upset about where a candidate's money is coming from. Maybe there should be a requirement that candidates have to put in statements as to their physical and psychiatric health," he said.

He said that setting criteria for public office would weed out some "bums in politics" whose ability is impaired by nervous disorders, "alcohol and women."

Mr. Givens, who started out as a Toronto alderman 21 years ago, said he got into politics because he doesn't write, paint or compose music and it's his way of being creative.

Politics at the municipal level, he said, allowed for individuality.

"You can scream and yell and make statements to the press."

He said he found municipal politics a lot more involving than being a "nothing" back bencher during his own term as a federal member of Parliament. He was elected to the Commons in 1968 as Liberal member for York west but he abandoned federal politics for provincial affairs.

He suggested that anyone wanting to use an aldermanic post as a stepping stone to higher levels of government should only serve a couple of terms. In senior govenments, he explained, being a prima donna is a detriment because everything is a team effort.

Mr. Givens also admitted that being mayor of Toronto from 1963-66 jaded him slightly.

"I got so used to the fancy office and the chauffeur and the buttons beside my desk to summon any commissioner, it was hard to go to the back seat at the back of Parliament."

New Pyramid Search Centres on Chephren

GIZA, Egypt (AP) — Either it is the largest and oldest of practical jokes or it hides priceless treasure.

This is the conclusion of Egyptian and American technicians who are quietly checking the 4,600-year-old pyramid of Chephren with the aid of cosmic rays and computers.

They hope to find treasure which would far surpass the art work found in the tomb of the boy King Tutankhamen, who died some 13 centuries after the pyramid of Chephren was built.

The pyramids of Giza have fascinated archeologists and ancient grave robbers through the ages. Men have been studying the pyramid of Chephren for more than 700 years. An inscription found in the room found beneath the huge pyramid says it was first visited by Sultan Aly Muhammed, son and successor of the great Saladin, about 1200.

The single room and inscription, and an empty sarcophagus, were rediscovered in 1818 but the present searchers believe the room and its contents were a decoy to throw off grave robbers. They believe the king and his belongings were buried elsewhere in the massive pyramid, among its 1,659,200 blocks of stone.

Such a find would far surpass King Tut's artifacts since they would be older. And Chephren, whose father Cheops employed 100,000 men to build his own and adjacent pyramid, was a more powerful king than Tut.

INVEST IN SEARCH

Physicist Luiz Alvarez of the University of California at Berkeley, who is with the present quest, believes there must be an undiscovered tomb in the pyramid of Chephren.

He notes that adjoining Cheops pyramid contains burial chambers for both king and queen, several other rooms and galleries, all within the pyramid.

The only room in Chephren known to living man is beneath it, not within it.

Egypt's Ein Shams University and the University of California at Berkeley, supported by the Smithsonian Institution, National Geographic Society and others, have invested some $750,000 in search of the missing room.

"Why would a man build such a structure?," asks Nick Chakakis of Livermore, Calif., an electronics expert who will oversee the current six-month collection of cosmic rays hitting the pyramid.

Sensitive equipment has been installed in the pyramid's known room to measure slow-moving cosmic rays from space which hit the same spot once every second.

The rays, stronger than x-rays, travel faster through space than through stone.

The pattern of incoming rays is taped and analyzed by computer at both participating universities. If they reveal a room they will also pinpoint its location in the pyramid, which is 445 feet high.

Bombay Welfare Experiment

BOMBAY (CP) — This Indian metropolis of more than five million people is the scene of an ambitious experiment in child welfare.

An estimated 5,000 children between the ages of four and 12 will receive free medical aid, textbooks and toys under a project to improve their health and school performance. It has been started by a committee of citizens with the help of donations from the public.

Nearly 2,000 school children from poor families will also get their lunch free. "The lunch will be really nourishing and we hope to give more children this facility," a project spokesman said.

A five-storey building has been constructed to house the children's health and recreational centre. Besides fully-equipped medical rooms, it will consist of play rooms and coaching classes for children who are backward in their studies.

End of Moon Exploration Era 'Beginning of Space Age'

By HOWARD BENEDICT

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Contrary to some beliefs, the United States space centre is not going to close down after Apollo 17 is launched here Dec. 6 on the final moon-landing journey in the series.

In fact, says Dr. Kurt Debus, the Kennedy Space Centre which he directs is ready to move into the next U.S. manned project, Skylab, with three launchings next year during which men will be flying in a space a total of five months.

After Skylab, Debus says, there will be a lull in manned space activity, with only a joint U.S.-Russian flight scheduled between 1974 and 1978. But during that time preparations will be under way for the revolutionary space shuttle, and during the decade of the '80s manned ships might be embarking from the Cape at the rate of one a week.

There also will be a continuing series of unmanned satellite launchings, including shots to many of the planets.

Skylab, a two-storey laboratory with the volume of a medium-size house, is to be launched unmanned by a Saturn 5 rocket next April 30.

The following day a three-man crew is to be launched in a modified Apollo capsule by a smaller Saturn 1-B rocket. The astronauts will enter the Skylab 270 miles above the earth and remain aboard for 28 days.

The astronauts will conduct more than 50 different types of experiments aimed at developing techniques for surveying earth's resources from space, determining man's ability to live and work in orbit for long periods, extending solar astronomy beyond earth's dense atmosphere and experimenting with space manufacturing processes.

Between Skylab and the shuttle there will be perhaps the most significant flight yet — a joint orbital mission in 1975 by U.S. astronauts and Russians cosmonauts.

First manned test flights of the shuttle are scheduled from Cape Kennedy in 1978 and it is hoped the rocket plane will be operational within a few months, functioning almost as simply as an airliner.

The shuttle will take off like a rocket, fly in orbit like a spaceship and land back on earth like an airplane. Each shuttle will be capable of making more than 100 trips into space before wearing out. Its two solid fuel booster rockets also will be reuseable after parachuting to earth.

The shuttle will be the size of a DC-9 airliner and can be flown by two pilots. It can carry up to 65,000 pounds of payload and 12 passengers who do not have to be trained astronauts. Scientists, medical experts, meteorologists, anyone in good health, can make the trip.

The craft's first function will be to carry unmanned satellites into orbit. On some missions the shuttle will serve as an interim space station, flying 30-day or more journeys. When large international laboratories orbit, perhaps in the next decade, the shuttle could ferry men and supplies between earth and the station.

Debus said a current traffic model envisages 721 shuttle launchings between 1979 and 1990.

There is no question but that we will go to Mars and colonize the moon probably sooner than we now think," Debus said.

Aussies Conditioned to Government, In Spite of the Polls

By VINCENT MATTHEWS
CP Correspondent

CANBERRA (CP) — All the public opinion polls point to a victory by the opposition Labor party in the Australian federal election Saturday, Dec. 2.

All the logic and statistics point that way too. Yet the opinion polls also show that a majority of Australians refuse to believe it can happen. They still expect the Liberal-Country party government to be returned.

Australians have become so used to Liberal-Country party coalition rule during the last 23 years that a change of government seems inconceivable. About 40 per cent of Australians were not even born when the last Labor government was in power and about 66 per cent have never voted in an election which Labor won.

Yet so much has happened to affect the government's chances over the last 20 months that all expert opinion suggests Prime Minister William McMahon will have a desperate struggle to stay in power.

He has, in fact, been struggling ever since he became leader in March, 1971, after John Gorton was ousted. His Liberal party has never been entirely united behind him and even as late as May this year there were moves to have him replaced.

PRICES CLIMB

Added to these party problems was an economic crisis that sent both prices and unemployment rising dangerously on Australian standards. Inflation last year reached a seven-per-cent annual rate about five per cent. Unemployment has reached two per cent, which is considered politically unacceptable in Australia.

Millions of dollars were poured into relief in the country areas and, helped by a rise in wool prices, conditions have improved. A budget in August cut taxes and raised social welfare payments and this now is having a stimulating effect on the economy.

But McMahon could have acted too late. A sudden burst of government activity in such areas as rural development and control on foreign investment could be seen as nothing more than electioneering. In that case, what might otherwise be admirable government initiatives turn into desperate attempts by politicians to stay in power.

LEADERS A CONTRAST

As the election campaign shapes up, McMahon's leadership seems to be emerging as the really crucial issue, as well as the feeling, particularly among younger voters, that it really is time for a change.

The contrast between the two leaders is most marked, especially in personal appearance. McMahon is five foot seven inches, Labor leader Gough Whitlam is six foot five. McMahon is untried as an election campaigner in the leadership role. Whitlam thrives in the campaign atmosphere.

Yet neither leader is wildly popular with Australians. McMahon's latest poll rating is 32 per cent. It was as low as 28 per cent in February. Whitlam's latest rating is 43 per cent.

The Labor party itself has inspired no great enthusiasm among the people, mainly because it is regarded as unknown and untried in government. In fact, if anything works against Labor's chances it will be this fear among the middle-class and middle-aged groups about what a change of government might mean.

The most discussed personality in Australian public life is the president of the trade union council, Robert Hawke.

He is being painted by government supporters as the real power in the Labor party and a man who could challenge Whitlam for leadership if Labor did become the government.

But Hawke's value to the Labor party is that he appeals to the blue collar workers while Whitlam does not. Whitlam, a barrister, comes from an upper middle-class background and is happiest talking about European history and art. Many Liberals feel Whitlam would make a much more successful leader of their party than of the Labor party.

So while Whitlam can appeal to the middle-class vote, Hawke, with his rough-and-tough TV manner, can attract and hold that traditional Labor vote among the working class.

For the first time since 1949, foreign policy and defence no longer are issues in an Australian election. The Nixon policy of disengagement from military conflict in Asia and a rapprochement with Peking and Moscow has had a significant impact on Australia. The government will be at a disadvantage in being unable to campaign on a warning of military danger to Australia and the need to preserve the American alliance.

In past elections it has accused the Labor party of being indifferent to Australian defence and the threat of Asian communism. The Red bogy is pretty well dead and buried in Australia these days.

Efforts are being made to raise the "permissive" society as an issue. A leading Dr. T. J. Connolly, said the Labor party could lower the moral standards of the country because some of its leading members, including Whitlam, believe the law preventing abortions should be changed and that censorship should be more liberal.

Canadiana Museum Shows 'Anything...'

By JEAN SHARP

TORONTO (CP) — Old storm windows, friendly house wreckers, plasterers who aren't compulsive about even walls are all treasures to Russell Cooper and his staff.

Mr. Cooper is director of the Black Creek Pioneer Village, a re-creation of a pre-Confederation community.

All those treasures are needed in the process of of uprooting old buildings and replantimg them at the village. Mr. Cooper says the painstaking operation presents slightly different problems every time, and involves a constant search for the right materials and skills.

Once a building has been chosen, detailed photographs and architect's drawings are made as it stands.

"Some buildings come in in one piece, if they're small enough. Others come piece by piece."

Highway regulations largely govern the size of what travels in one piece. Then come negotiations with municipalities, arrangements to move wires, cables, to cross tracks.

If a building has to be taken down, every board and its location must be numbered.

REBUILDING COSTLY

"While all this is going on, our Conservation Foundation is busy trying to raise money. We get $35,000 a year for building construction from the municipality through the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority which operates the village. And people have been very generous."

Reconstruction of the village flour mill, its most ambitious building, cost about $250,000.

Time may be a factor. Mr. Cooper has his eye on a doctor's house due to be torn down in a year. The Conservation Foundation has three months to raise $35,000 to move and rebuild a log home given to it.

"Once a building comes in we usually try to put it on a good foundation, to make it last and to provide storage space."

Most of the buildings must also be discreetly heated and reinforced for safety.

"Usually we put new siding on because the siding has usually been changed over 150 years.

"Inside, you'll find a building has usually been remodelled at least once. There may be an addition we don't keep. We may have to rebuild a section that was taken down."

Once the shell is up, the adjusting begins.

"It could be half the trim is gone around windows or baseboards," Mr. Cooper said. "Somewhere you'll find a wee bit of the original, and you take it to a mill. It can cost $1,500 for a special run of trim. In a big building like our Halfway House, you might get three or four kinds of trim.

"You can have trouble matching wood, especially with the width of flooring.

"Modern glass has no distortion, and earlier glass always had some. We find storm windows made up to about 1890 a good source, or greenhouse glass up to about 1920. We buy windows, frame and all, from houses up to the 1880s.

"One wrecker lets me know if he has something we might use, old fireplace mantels, for instance.

CITES PROBLEMS

"There are all kinds of problems. You can't get every brick down intact, you have to wreck some. They vary by color and size. We did have a source of reproductions, but they've gone out of business.

"We're having trouble getting cut nails.

"Plaster is another thing. it's difficult to get someone to do a poor job of plastering to make it look like the old lime and hair plaster."

Mr. Cooper said there are still suitable buildings around, but they won't be available forever, and the furnishing and equipment used in them are getting scarce faster.

"I wish there'd be money from both provincial and federal governments. I think there is a responsibility. I know there are other things that have higher priorities, but I think we have an obligation to tell the story of Canada."

Boeing Gives Work To Northwest

EDMONTON (CP)—Northwest Industries of Edmonton has been awarded a $6-million contract by Boeing aircraft to build tail-assembly sections for Boeing 707 aircraft.

The agreement provides for the manufacture of 35 sets of aft-fuselage sections over 2½ years with an option to ship an additional 30 sets in the following 18 months.

Deliveries will start next summer.

The first 10 aircraft with the Edmonton-made component will be shipped to China.

Northwest Industries now employs 300 people and is working on contracts worth more than $40 million for Lockheed Aircraft Corp., Scottish Aviation Ltd. of Prestwick, Scotland, and the Canadian forces.

Peru Tries to Stamp Out Santa Claus

LIMA (AP) — Christmas is less than two months away, but already the word is out: Santa Claus is not welcome in Peru this year. Neither are Christmas trees or other yuletide symbols that do not conform to "Peruvian reality."

Taking their place will be "El Nino Manuelito," the "Peruvian version" of the Christ child, traditional manger scenes, and other "completely Peruvian" symbols.

The education ministry says advertising men have agreed to eliminate foreign themes from television and radio advertisements. It expresses hope that the public will follow the example.

The step is being taken to put Christmas advertising in line with military government decrees requiring that ads harmonize with educational goals. The government controls 51 per cent of all commercial TV stations and 25 per cent of major radio stations.

Santa Claus is known here as Papa Noel. He and Christmas trees, sleighs and reindeer are symbols of Nordic countries, says Dr. Samuel Preez, head of the ministry's collective communications department.

"We don't have reindeer or snow-covered pine trees at Christmas time," he adds. "We're in the middle of summer."

The southern hemisphere summer begins in December and Peru's only snow is at the top of some of the higher Andean peaks.

Perez points out that his office cannot oblige all businessmen to eliminate symbols from their store windows, nor can it force homeowners to discontinue their usage.

But bearded Papa Noels who normally appear in Lima stores and downtown streets during the Christmas shopping season "will have to beat a retreat" due to lack of advertising support "and because they are out of style."

Rev. Rene Paredes, spokesman for the Lima archbishop's office, finds the step in agreement with Roman Catholic sentiment.

"Christmas is a universal celebration and should be expressed in accordance with the sentiments of each country," he said. "It is fair that here we have our own Christmas themes."

Not all agree.

"Papa Noel is something which goes beyond national or seasonal boundaries," says a Lima housewife. "Today he is universal and forms a part of the concept of Christmas."

Mental Cases The Crux

MATSQUI, B.C. (CP) — Dr. Chunilah Roy has been given a hard task—trying to establish a modern treatment centre for mentally-ill prisoners in what used to be a minimum-security prison for drug addicts.

The recently opened centre is in a pastoral location, 50 miles east of Vancouver in the Fraser Valley, and from the outside looks like a small college.

Patients are addressed as Mr., Miss or Mrs., not by their last names and numbers as in prison, and the staff of psychiatric nurses and corrections officers is developing a rapport with the patients, said Dr. Roy.

He is the only psychiatrist on staff but four others are to be hired soon. There are 50 patients and the centre has a capacity for 135. The rest of the staff at the centre consists of four psychologists, a research director, officers in charge of the patients' social and occupational development, and a physician to look after physically-ill prisoners.

There's a two-to-one ratio between medical staff and corrections officers, said Dr. Roy, which reflects the philosophy behind the centre.

Church Enters Movie Business

By RUSS PULLIAM

NEW YORK (AP) — A national Protestant denomination has ventured into the commercial film-distributing business in the United States in an effort to counteract the emphasis on sex and violence in modern movies.

In explaining the unusual move by the 1.5 million-member American Baptist Convention, Rev. Kenneth Curtis, general manager of the church's newly-formed Gateway Films, says:

"The motion picture theatre is a central place where the values and views of young Americans are shaped."

This is ample reason, he adds, for the church to get into that field. Moreover, he says, "the pervasive work of the gospel in society is as powerful a subject as any other for the screen."

Nevertheless, the denomination is the first in the U.S. to enter the highly-competitive movie arena with professional quality productions, one of them already a success, and the other soon to hit the market.

Gateway Films currently is booking The Cross and the Switchblade in 250 to 300 theatres in the country. The film, starring Pat Boone, already has grossed more than $6 million in more than a year of showings.

STARS ANNE BAXTER

The agency this fall also is releasing The Late Liz, a film starring Academy Award winners Anne Baxter and Jack Albertson, and has plans for distributing other films with a religious message.

"While the sex-and-violence films are going stronger and stronger, a deeper and deeper backlash is growing against them," says Mr. Curtis.

Herb Gillis, a film distributing executive who was involved in marketing of the movie, Love Story, agrees there is a growing, major demand for the type of movie that upholds the value of character and faith.

While Gateway's objective is not to make money, since it is a non-profit organization, it recognizes that its films must attract audiences, or theatres won't show them.

But the initial offering, The Cross and the Switchblade, has demonstrated such religiously-motivated films can win audiences in the secular marketplace.

The film, based on the true story of country preacher David Wilkerson who became an evangelist among youth gang members and drug addicts in New York City's ghettoes, is to be kept on the movie circuit at least another year.

Survey Shows Opposition To Apartments

Strong opposition against multiple-dwelling development on Beach Drive is shown in a sampling of residents opinions contained in an Oak Bay cost-benefit study released Tuesday.

As part of his $4,000 study, Fred Zech, a graduate town planning student from the University of British Columbia, mailed survey forms to 350 people and received 148 replies.

Of these, he says:

"Multiple family housing is favored in its low-rise forms and opposed the stronger the greater the number of storeys.

"Most residents are the least opposed to development along Oak Bay Avenue but strongly opposed to developments on Beach Drive."

Oak Bay council's zoning committee are working on a bylaw to reduce the denisty in the area from Willows Beach to the Uplands and from Estevan to Beach.

Since 1927, the area has been zoned for three-storey frame construction plus basements.

The new bylaw being considered by the committee would reduce the heights of buildings to 30 feet plus five feet for elevator housings, demand non-combustible construction and 100 per cent underground parking.

Developers and owners of property they wish to sell for development in the areas have mounted opposition to this plan.

It will be reconsidered Thursday morning after the committee has made a tour of the area.

Most residents that replied to Zech's inquiries felt that apartments make an area too urban but made it clear they did not agree with contentions that apartments don't pay their way or that tenants are of a lower class.

Those living next door to apartments were more in favor of them than others.

A total of 73 per cent said the Foul Bay-Elgin area was best suited for future multiple housing. Next in line were Oak Bay Avenue, the Victoria Riding Academy land (owned by the municipality) and Cadboro Bay Road.

ACUPUNCTURIST Roger Langrick, who was ordered to stop his private practice by Vancouver city officials, demonstrates his art on an unidentified patient. Langrick plans to appeal the stop-work order, issued because he does not have a licence to practise.

Acupuncturist Resists Order to Close Clinic

VANCOUVER — A city licensing department official Tuesday ordered Roger Paul Langrick to close his acupuncture clinic because his application for a business licence had been rejected.

Langrick responded with a call for Dennis Cocke, provincial minister of health, to "form a committee of university people, neurologists and so on, and fully investigate me."

"I want a full investigation of my medical knowledge and techniques," Langrick said. "If I'm guilty they can do what they like with me. But if they don't think there's anything wrong in what I'm doing, I would like permission to assist in any acupuncture research in the city."

Cocke said in an interview he is looking into the matter.

"I'm not too sure I can intercede in this case," he said. "It was the city's decision to close him down and I haven't been called upon by anyone," the minister said. "We're looking into the whole situation concerning acupuncture and we're trying to determine how an acupuncturist could be evaluated or licensed under our current system. We have to protect the patient."

He said he is in favor of acupuncture and would fully support any research into it provided it was supervised by medical people.

When the city official visited Langrick at his clinic, some patients were in the waiting room. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Michael Vojkovich who said they had come from Seattle.

"Roger Langrick is the best acupuncturist in our region," said Mrs. Vojkovich. She claimed he had cured her high blood pressure in one previous treatment.

Langrick, with Leung Kok Yeun, started the North American College of Acupuncture in Vancouver in August of 1971.

He said he learned acupuncture in England, obtained extensive training in the traditional method under Yuen in Vancouver, "and since then have been doing a lot more study. I spent one week at the neurological hospital in Martinez, Calif. this August, under Dr. Alan Shifman."

Langrick is not recognized by the B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Milt Harrell, chief licensing inspector, said Langrick had applied for a business licence before and had been turned down. "He could have appealed to city council, but he didn't use the right," Harrell said.

"What's the use?" remarked Langrick Tuesday. "They would have turned me down."

Harrell said acupuncture is going on in Vancouver, "but it is being done secretly. No one has a business licence to have an acupuncture clinic."

Langrick said he probably would continue his work in Seattle if turned out of B.C.

But John Keith, assistant attorney-general for Washington State, said he would not be allowed to have private patients.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

We wish to thank all the wonderful people and Church Groups who prayed for Brenda (Smyth) during those darks days when she was so ill in hospital and a very special thank you to Dr. John Harvey and the nurses at Victoria General Hospital. Those intensive care nurses are wonderful dedicated people. We give our Blessed Lord the praise and the glory for hearing and answering all the prayers that went out to him.
—Thank you from the bottom of our hearts. Jenny and Charlie Gotlsh, (Grandparents).

STEP UP TO A BETTER FUTURE
Do you want financial security and independence? Let me show you how you can earn thousands of dollars selling Real Estate. An interview today could change your entire future. It selected you will be given complete on-the-job training in a program which is considered one of the best in the Real Estate industry. It includes field work, study courses, as well as formal schooling. Through this program men and women without any prior experience have become successful sales people. For further information and an interview call Eric Saffer, recruiting and sales training manager, Wall and Redekop Realty Ltd., 1820 Blanshard Street, 386-8321.

IF YOU ARE CONSIDERING A career in real estate, the following information will be of interest to you. "Facts, not fallacies, about the Pre-Licensing Course will be helpful to you in facing the requirements. These are the figures given to the Real Estate Council by the University of British Columbia. Only 36% of those who commence the Salesmen's Pre-Licensing Course, both complete the course and pass the exam, and are thus in a position to be licensed, if they meet the other requirement. (And of that 36% only six in ten will still be in the business three years later . . . home 36 peope out of the original 100 who registered for the course.)" Phone 598-4210 for further information.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Signs of Brain Dysfunction

Several years ago, that remarkably able psychiatrist, Dr. Jules Masserman, edited a splendid book entitled "Current Psychiatric Therapies" (Volume 7), in which he described a number of the symptoms that a child will probably show when he is suffering from minimal brain dysfunction. As Dr. Masserman says, the child may show several, if not all, of the following symptoms:

He may show quick changes in his emotional state. He will tend to overreact to situations. He can be irritable and aggressive at one moment, easily moved to tears the next moment, and perhaps in another moment he will be "like an angel." Then he may go into a rage over some tiny irritation that another child would hardly notice.

He is likely to have such a short attention span that he will easily be distracted. He'll flit from one thing to another unless involved in an activity he finds exceedingly interesting. Or he may be able to concentrate well when alone, but in the presence of other children, he'll show an attention span far shorter than would be normal for his age.

He may tend to be impulsive and unpredictable and he may be inconsistent in his bahaviour. He may also be what physicians call hyperkinetic, or overactive — constantly in motion and going from one object or activity to another. He is likely to be restless. He may fidget and have a "driven" quality. His parents and teachers may complain that "he just can't sit long enough to pay attention and learn anything."

Because of his lack of ability to learn much from experience, and his lack of favorable response to punishment, his mother may be at her wit's end. It may seem to her that he is being intentionally "impossible" when, after she has "told him a thousand times not to do something, he goes right ahead and does it."

And curiously, although he may seem to be very confident on the surface, he at times will show a lack of trust in himself or faith in his ability to do even simple things. He may also have trouble learning to do simple things such as tying his shoes. Also he may be clumsy and awkward because of defects in muscle coordination. He may do well enough with large movements, but he may fail to perform well small movements.

As I have said, his temper is likely to be very short. A normal child may knock down an irritating playmate by pushing him or jumping on him, while a child with minimal brain dysfunction may kick him viciously or hit him with a baseball bat.

S. Korean Poll Backs Park Rule

SEOUL (AP) — President Chung Hee Park thanked the South Koreans today for their 12-to-1 vote approving a new constitution that allows him to remain in office indefinitely with more power.

Returns from 97 per cent of the estimated 15 million ballots cast in Tuesday's referendum were 12,863,468 in favor of the new constitution and 1,087,965 opposed. About 1.6 million persons did not vote.

Park said the outcome reflected the people's identification with the "main forces that are carrying on revitalizing reforms."

The new constitution extends the presidential term to six years from four, ends the three-term limit on presidential tenure and gives the president control of the National Assembly.

Meanwhile, negotiators for the North and South Korean Red Cross organizations met in Seoul for the fourth round of their talks to reunite the estimated 10 million families separated since 1945 by the partition of the Korean peninsula.

The previous sessions have been confined to procedural matters, but the two sides agreed to begin discussions today on ways and means of reuniting the families.

Newcomers Puzzled By Early Budding

Shrubs which form flower buds in fall but which do not open until spring are part of any good garden design in the Victoria rea, but puzzle newcomers from colder parts.

They want to know whether all these buds should be removed immediately and whether something is wrong with the shrub.

Will they harm the plant if they remain over winter? Are the flowers likely to be blooming by Christmas?

To use a specific example by taking some of the early spring rhododendrons — flower buds begin to develop after the early summer new growth has been made. According to the varieties, they are recognizable as flower buds by early September or up to October. By them, there is no mistaking the round green scaly flower buds as distinct from the more pointed growth buds.

They will not open until their appointed time, from late March until late May, again according to the variety. Rhodos flowering after that period are classed as late blooming, and sometimes do not show buds until nearly the end of winter.

Camellia varieties follow much the same pattern of bud formation in fall and opening in spring.

★ ★ ★

The only time when buds should be removed from a rhododendron (or camellia) in fall might be if the plant was very young (a year-old rooted cutting for instance) and the grower might fear the burden of a full size flower head will be too much for the size of the root system.

Another shrub with flower buds showing in drooping or upright clusters now in Pieris, its several species having the two types of flower racemes.

It is a broadleaved evergreen also; but in this case we often see flowers opening in early winter on shrubs growing in sheltered gardens.

Skimmia reevesiana rubella began to show buds during October but the delicious fragrant pinkish flowers will not open until April. The fine old Laurustinus (Viburnum tinus), as local experienced gardeners know is loaded with coral colored buds now, with an odd flower opened on the sunny side of a shrub. These buds lack the protective green sheathing provided by nature for the rhododendron and camellia buds, so in hard winter frost may burn the buds.

You will notice that these shrubs with flower buds in fall for spring opening are all broadleaved evergreens. When you find a delicious shrub with buds now, they will likely open in any mild spell during winter.

In this class are Viburnum fragrans, Hamamelis mollis (Witch-hazel), the Yellow Winter-jasmine, Cornus nuttalli (native Dogwood) and Daphne mezereum.

No wonder winter gardening is such a happy experience for new arrivals to these coastal parts.

SOLUTION THURSDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

One of the most difficult lures for the inexperienced bridge player to over come is the urge to win a trick whenever the opportunity presents itself. This applies not only to a novice declarer, but equally to a novice defender. This latter situation is the theme to today's deal, which arose in a low-level rubber-bridge game.

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♠ K J 10 9 8
♡ 9 6 2
◊ 8 4
♣ A 5 3

WEST
♠ 7 4 2
♡ K 10 5
◊ Q 10 2
♣ J 10 9 8

EAST
♠ A Q 5
♡ 8 7 4 3
◊ J 9 6 3
♣ 7 2

SOUTH
♠ 6 3
♡ A Q J
◊ A K 7 5
♣ K Q 6 4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ◊	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♣.

The bidding was quite sound, especially when one considers that the deal arose in a novice game. Actually, as the cards were divided, four spades was a superior contract, but I doubt whether many players (experts included) would have arrived at that major-suit game.

West's jack-of-clubs opening lead was captured by South's queen, after which the three of spades was led. When West followed suit with a low spade, dummy's jack was inserted. East promptly won this trick with his queen. He then returned his remaining club, which South took with the king.

It was not a routine matter for South to lead his last spade and drive out East's ace, thus establishing three spade winners — with, of course, the club ace serving as an entry for the cashing of the spades.

When South made his initial spade lead (at trick two) and experienced East defender would have allowed dummy's jack to win the trick. It would have been obvious to East that declarer was going to attack and develop the spade suit; and that East would always make two spade tricks with his ace and queen.

Admittedly, it was difficult for our inexperienced East defender to appreciate that the non-taking of the first spade lead would break the North-South communication, and prevent the establishment and cashing of dummy's spades. But such would have been the case had East declined to win the first spade lead.

With North's jack winning, South would return to his hand via a diamond, and lead his remaining spade, putting on dummy's ten. East would take this trick with his queen. Declarer would not be a doomed man. While he could get to dummy via the club ace to establish the spade suit, he could never again return there to cash it.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"You know Don died after his crash," said Tom. "A real tragedy."

Ann nodded. "Terrible for Judy, only days before their kids were born."

"That's right. But now there's a problem about the twins, a girl and a boy," Tom told her. "It's the Will he made just before the end. If it was a son the boy would gett two thirds of the estate, Judy the rest. But if a girl, she would ger one third and two thirds would go to Judy. Nothing at all about twins."

How would you handle the problem?

Thanks for an idea to L. J. Upton, Toronto.

Ban Criticized

VANCOUVER (CP) — New herring fishery regulations which restrict the 1973 catch to 50,000 tons, ban herring fishing in Georgia Strait and limit licences to 96 were criticized Monday by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union. President Homer Stevens said the quota should be doubled, the closure lifted and the number of licences increased.

Domestic Auto Dealers See Rosy Future

By RICHARD ANCO
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Some of the happiest men across Canada these days are new car salesmen, especially North American car dealers.

Car sales are booming and the outlook for sales through the 1973 model year ranges from "very strong" to "real good."

Their optimism seems to be pinned to three things:

—More money is available and people are spending it;

—A temporary price freeze placed on U.S.-built cars was reflected in a hold-the-line stand by Canadian manufacturers, keeping early 1973-style cars at near 1972 price levels and enticing customers

—Evidence that the share of the car market for Japanese and European imports is levelling off, partly because of the upward push on prices as a result of currency revaluation abroad and partly because of more effective competition from North American compacts and sub-compacts.

A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press shows the optimism extends from coast to coast. Dealers in every province report increased sales at the start of the 1973 model year in October compared with a year ago. There were some "holding our own" reports from import dealers.

Of the Big Four manufacturers in Canada, Ford, Chrysler and General Motors reported all-time record sales in October through Canadian dealers. American Motors' October sales were the highest since 1965.

Ford sold 20,253 passenger cars, up 14.1 per cent from the previous record in 1968 and 15.9 per cent higher than a year ago. GM sold 30,916 cars compared with 29,335 last year and Chrysler sales were up 19.3 per cent at 17,897. American Motors' sales increased 18.4 per cent from October, 1971, to 2,315 units.

The Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association reports significant increases in actual production for three of the Big Four in calendar 1972 to Nov. 4, indicating that the high sales momentum is expected to carry over into calendar 1973.

Only GM showed a drop in actual production, to 288,003 cars from 352,851, and company officials attributed this to the extra long turnover period in converting the Ste. Therese, Que., plant to Vega production and the closedown in Oshawa, Ont., resulting from extensive changes in intermediate GM models.

Ford production was up more than 61,000 to 392,708 cars, Chrysler increased 26,587 to 225,006 and American Motors produced 12,163 more cars for a total of 48,797.

If the import-versus-domestic car sales pattern that developed in the first eight months of this year holds for the final quarter, it will mark the first time since 1966 that overseas-made cars did not capture a bigger share of the Canadian market.

In 1966 that share was less than 19 per cent, a sharp drop from nearly 30 per cent in 1960. But since then there has been a steady increase in the import share to slightly below 25 per cent in 1971. There appears to be a levelling off at that percentage this year.

In most areas, dealers said a main reason for higher sales is the greater availability of money.

Claude Sigouin, sales manager of Hyroad Ford Motors Ltd. in Montreal, said "finance terms are better than last year; it's easier for people to buy." Intermediate-size Torinos and Fords were good sellers at present and he had even sold seven luxury Thunderbirds at $8,000 each "which is exceptional."

Jean Chevrier, regional manager for Canadian Motor Industries Ltd. of Montreal, Toyota distributors, also cited easy credit and money availability.

"There's a lot of money around. People have money in the bank and they're waiting to spend it. And the finance companies are wide open in competition with the banks."

Dealers in Toronto and Edmonton mentioned the U.S. price-freeze on cars early in the model year, a factor that probably encouraged many buyers to act quickly. Eventually, Chrysler added an average $14 to car prices after Oct. 16 and American Motors added an average $42 effective Nov. 1 while GM went after the U.S. price commission for an average increase of $54 and Ford for $92.

M. E. Wolfe, spokesman for Edmonton Motors, a major Chevrolet dealer, said many customers bought 1973 models to beat the expected lifting of the price ceiling. Medium-size cars were among the best sellers, especially Cutlass.

Reg Crozier, sales manager for Gorries Golden Mile Motor Ltd., Toronto, detected a 22-per-cent increase in buying habits and expected a strong market into 1973. His Cutlass GM series also was a leading seller and he said the early freeze on prices contributed to the buying burst.

Doug Wren, sales manager for Elgin Motors Co. Ltd., Toronto, said his 4,400 sales last year make him the largest Ford dealer in Canada.

The outlook for 1973 is good, he predicted. Elgin Motors intended to keep campaigning against foreign imports by "appealing to the buyer's sense of pride to get him to buy Canadian." Customers were favoring the sub-compact Pinto, which accounted for 45 per cent of the market, and at the opposite end of the scale large luxury models such as the Ford LTD.

Hornets and Gremlins were reported as good sellers by American Motors Dealers in Edmonton and Toronto.

"People are getting rid of the big cars, the big gas-eaters," said Glen Bonney, chief salesman of Bob Bannerman Motors Ltd., Toronto.

Leslie Kay, sales manager for Scotia Chevrolet-Oldsmobile Ltd., Halifax, predicted a steady sales increase into 1973 with not much to fear from imports.

But Bob McHarg Ltd., Saint John, N.B., dealer for Datsuns, had sales about 30 per cent higher this fall compared with 1971 and its president said he is optimistic about sales in 1973 throughout the Atlantic area.

In British Columbia, one of the most competitive battlegrounds for imports, revaluation of the Japanese yen and the resulting rise in the price of Japanese imports have given domestic compacts and sub-compacts a bigger bite of the market.

"It used to be that customers would say they were comparison shopping between a Pinto and one of the imports, and wind up going for the import," said Les Larsen, sales manager of Dominion Vancouver Motors Ltd. "Now they go for the Pinto because the price situation has improved."

A Pinto in Vancouver starts at $2,313, freight charges included. The Japanese Datsun starts at $2,245.

William Haughton, sales administration manager of Nissan Automobile Co. (Canada) Ltd., expected 1972 Datsun sales to be about the same as 1971 with an increase of five to 10 per cent next year "providing the international monetary situation doesn't undergo any significant fluctuation."

Datsun sales across Canada last year totalled 55,000 units, with 10,000 sold in B.C. Revaluation of the yen amounted to a 15-per-cent price increase at the retail level.

Volkswagen dealers in Newfoundland, Toronto, Edmonton and Vancouver agreed there was a settling down in the foreign import market. Compared with the last two years there will be a levelling off, said Arthur Keller, sales manager of Volkswagen Yonge Ltd., Toronto, adding that the small-car market in Canada has been pretty well explored.

But, said Jack Greenwood of Addison Ltd., Toronto GM dealer, the more luxurious imports costing between $3,500 and $5,000 are making an impact on the market. The foreign models remain competitive and "will continue to hold a share of the market."

SCHOOL SYSTEM BEATEN

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — Fed up with public school education, a group of parents pulled their children out this fall and set up their own one-room school house seven miles north of town.

The children no longer take courses dealing with sex education, roots of prejudice, the causes of wars and the differences between liberals and conservatives.

Instead they memorize Bible passages, have science lessons preceded by scriptural passages and learn New Testament Greek. Order is maintained with a paddle.

There are 33 students in Grades 2-12 at the St. Charles Christian School. Two of them, both girls, are seniors. They are protected from what the principal, Rev. M. H. Clark, calls the "socialistic and anti-religious" teachings at the public schools.

"The student here is exposed to better things, a better foundation for the right kind of living. He'll be ready to go out in the world and hold his own."

The trouble with public schools, Mr. Clark said, is "they're amoral. They're not telling the students certain things are wrong." The Christian school's literature says it is founded on "principles of righteousness" and "good old-fashioned Americanism."

Setting up a private school is not cheap. The parents who decided to do it here this fall have to pay tuition of $300 a year per student. The rate is lower for other children in a family. The red brick school building was bought as surplus from the public school system, and a bus is used to haul students, some of them living 20 miles away.

The parents are determined to make it work, however, and are talking about setting up other small schools and perhaps a junior college.

New Bengali Exodus Documented

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — For the second time in 12 months, Bengalis are fleeing Pakistan soil.

Risking arrest in Pakistan and robbery in Afghanistan, the new wave consists of 400 to 500 Bengalis crossing illegally through lawless tribal territory each week from Pakistan into Afghanistan, reports the Indian embassy in the Afghan capital.

Leaving Pakistan illegally, the Bengalis are on their way to their newly independent homeland, Bangladesh, the former East Pakistan.

About 10 million Bengalis fleeing military rule had crossed from what was then East Pakistan in November, 1971, and flooded the Indian states of West Bengal, Bihar and Tripura. The exodus was a major factor in the war between Pakistan and India in December, 1971.

India this time not only is uncomplaining, but its officials are supporting the Bengalis with money while they await transportation home, also provided with the help of the Indian embassy.

NUMBER INCREASES

The Indian embassy pays room and board for Bengalis who have jammed the dozens of dingy Afghan hotels ordinarily catering to the foreign hippie tourist trade. The embassy provides each escapee with pocket money, travel documents and, for those who need it, medical care. It arranges transportation with the government-owned Afghan Ariana Airlines, which flies the Bengalis over Pakistan territory to the Indian capital, New Delhi.

In New Delhi, the Bangladesh high commission takes care of its nationals who have yet to set foot in independent Bangladesh. Afghanistan does not recognize Bangladesh, and no Bangladesh representative operates here.

About 6,000 Bengalis have filtered into Afghanistan through Pakistan, the Indians say. Despite threats of arrest in Pakistan, harassment on both sides of the border and robbery in Afghanistan, the escapee flow has been increasing steadily since July, when many Bengalis in government service in Pakistan were fired.

Pakistan has refused to let the estimated 200,000 Bengalis living in West Pakistan when the country split in December, 1971, leave as long as 91,000 Pakistani troops and civilians remain in Indian war prisoner camps. Bangladesh has refused to agree to the return of the prisoners until Pakistan formally recognizes Bangladesh independence.

Undersea Oil Search Refined

VANCOUVER (CP) — A company incorporated in British Columbia has directed development of equipment which may enable oil companies to handle offshore petroleum wells at depths as great as 3,000 feet.

The equipment would enable oil men to work beneath the surface in ordinary clothes and using ordinary tools and without necessity of high air pressures and subsequent decompression.

The company is Lockheed Petroleum Services Ltd., a subsidiary of Lockheed Aircraft Corp., and the early sub sea trials were conducted in B.C. waters during 1970.

Development of well-servicing equipment would enable oilmen to work at great depths, considered a major area where oil companies hope extensive petroleum reserves may be found in the next decade.

The initial study was undertaken by the American Lockheed company in 1966 and the Canadian subsidiary was formed three years later.

Dummy wellhead hardware was set up at 150 feet in B.C. waters and one of the most difficult aspects of wellhead completion on the ocean floor was successfully demonstrated. That was connection of flowlines to the wellhead plumbing.

The big test of the equipment came last summer when a capsule 30 feet tall and 10 feet in diameter was tested in the Gulf of Mexico off Louisiana.

Men were lowered to the sea bottom in the capsule using the same equipment as in handling oil wells on dry land and working at normal atmospheric pressure.

The new system may obviate the need of deep-sea divers or remote manipulation of oilwell hardware from submarines.

Is Reid Looking for a Buyer?

Is the Reid Centre site for sale or isn't it?

The $13 million question was puzzling city hall officials, aldermen, realtors and others today following the circulation of a real estate firm's 40-page report dealing with the proposed Wharf Street development and its investment potential.

One news report this morning said the controversial project of Vancouver developer J. A. Reid appears to be up for sale before the first footings have been laid or the first bucket of cement poured.

But from several sides today, including well-informed realtors, the Times was told that the situation is by no means clear and there is no solid basis for assuming any selling intentions on Reid's part.

From Reid's Vancouver office the only comment of any sort offered in clarification was a categorical denial of the newspaper report by a woman clerical assistant, who said she had been besieged by calls all morning.

"As far as this office is concerned it's just not true," she said, adding that Reid himself is away until next week.

From a series of interviews this reporter found no one in Victoria prepared to make a firm interpretation of the National Trust Company brochure which bears the title of Victoria realtor John A. Relling and is dated September, 1972.

But these are some of the guesses as to Reid's motive in commissioning the report by a Vancouver firm of consulting economists and engineers:

1. Reid may have every intention of proceeding with the massive, hotel-residential complex, for which he was awarded a land-use contract by city council last June. But he wants to arrange sale of the property in advance.

2. His original source of financing may have fallen through and he is now looking for syndicate financing.

3. Reid has been unable to find any financing for the scheme because his original, higher-density proposal created so much furore that he agreed to scale it down — and the final compromtise may be considered economically unfeasible by the mortgage lenders.

As a result he "want's out."

But one prominent realtor discounted the third possibility on the grounds that Reid "wouldn't go through all this" for what is, in effect, a straightforward land sale.

"All this" is a comprehensive, detailed report including extensive background information on the proposal; the site's strategic location ("undoubtedly the most spectacular development in North America in terms of land utilization and consumer service . . ."); estimates of income and expenditure for both the hotel and commercial aspects of the site; and return on sale of condominiums.

"It's a fine, solid presentation," one realtor said in admiration.

B.C. Cools Olympic Hopes

Premier Barrett indicated today it is "most unlikely" his government will give financial support to bring the beleaguered 1976 winter Olympic games to British Columbia.

But the federal government, through Health Minister John Munro, said Ottawa is willing to stand by its original commitment of $10 million towards the games . . . if B.C. maintains its original position on financing.

And he added, if the province renews its "overall commitment" on the original application, Ottawa may consider revising upwards its contribution.

Under the Social Credit government of two years ago, B.C. pledged up to $10 millions towards the estimated $21 million cost to bring the games here.

Barrett said the government definitely will not spend "a lot of money" just to have the Olympics held in B.C. He said estimated costs of a highway built between Vancouver and the Garibaldi site, according to Highways Minister Bob Strachan, would run to about $48 million.

"We're not going to spend that kind of money," Barrett said. "We can build an awful lot of chronic care hospitals with that kind of money."

Barrett told reporters he has received no official representations from anyone connected with the Vancouver bid to stage the winter games. And he said that even if representations had been received, it would be "most unlikely" that B.C. would contribute financially.

Later, Barrett's office released a form letter which is being sent out to any persons who have written the premier about possible B.C. participation in the games.

Barrett's letter reads: "Thank you for your recent letter concerning the possibility of British Columbia being the site of the 1976 Winter Olympics.

ONTARIO BOOSTS PUBLIC TRANSIT

TORONTO (CP) — A $1.3-billion plan to encourage public transit in Ontario cities and towns during the next decade was revealed today by Premier William Davis.

The plan, which applies to smaller communities as well as larger urban centres, would have the provincial government pay 75 per cent of costs of building new public transportation facilities to shift emphasis away from urban expressways.

Emphasizing "people first," the plan calls for transportation systems capable of carrying 10,000 to 20,000 passengers an hour.

"In these days of advancing technology, it would be folly to continue to rely solely on the present-day use of the automobile and our other existing systems of transportation," the premier said.

"We now have before us a unique opportunity to move forward from pollution and bumper-to-bumper traffic jams."

"With the multitude of demands on limited public funds, we must find less expensive ways to move people."

The premier told members of the Ontario legislature and municipal leaders gathered at the Science Centre to hear the policy statement that not only have expressways become prohibitively expensive within city boundaries, but so have subways.

"Our technical people tell us that subway construction costs have reached such a high level that few municipalities throughout the world can continue their construction," said Davis.

Fiery Death of a Film Stuntman

Dangerous Cold Pills Face Ban

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal food and drug directorate has taken the first step towards banning the sale of pain killers containing both phenacetin and salicylates (aspirin). Many headache and cold tablets would be affected.

In a trade letter to drug makers released today, the directorate announced proposed regulations to end the wholesale trade in such compounds by May 1. Retail outlets could continue to sell off their existing stocks after that date.

Use of combinations of phenacetin and aspirin has been blamed for kidney damage and other medical disorders. A recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal criticized use of the combination products and said doctors and the public should be made aware of the dangers.

One study reported in the journal said one in every 20 persons taking dialysis treatment for damaged kidneys is the victim of such combination drugs. Such products had to be taken in large numbers for a long time before harm is done.

In an interview today, P. A. Soucy, special assistant to the director of the drug directorate, said the proposed ban would affect "a good number of products" still on the market, including Excedrin. Two years ago, more than 300 over-the-counter products contained the combination.

Many manufacturers of popular brands of tablets that previously contained both phenacetin and aspirin had taken the step on their own already, he said.

For example, Frosst removed phenacetin from their headache tablets voluntarily about one year ago, he said. Anacin did the same even earlier when the first reports of dangers began.

Manufacturers have until Jan. 15 to make representation against the proposed changes.

NEWS BRIEFS

Travel Ban Lifted

THURMONT, Md. (AP) — President Nixon lifted today a rigid government ban on travel of United States aircraft and ships to China. The action, announced by a spokesman at Nixon's Camp David, Md., retreat, is a first step toward eventual establishment of scheduled U.S. air and sea service to China.

Body in Lift

TORONTO (CP) — A 53-year-old Minden, Ont., man visiting the city was beaten to death in a downtown hotel Tuesday night and his body stuffed into an elevator. Police said the victim, William Morgan Mark, was attacked in a third-floor room and then dragged to the elevator of the Waverley Hotel. The elevator was then sent to the lobby. A guest entering the elevator door in the lobby almost tripped over the body.

Montrealer Axed

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have arrested a Vietnamese student in connection with the axe slaying of one man and the wounding of another Tuesday night. A man about 25 was found in the second-floor apartment with his head cut off. Another man was slashed in the arms and chest.

First B-52 Lost

Times News Services

SAIGON — A United States B-52 bomber was shot down today in the heaviest attack of the war on North Vietnam.

It was the first of the giant bombers shot down in the war. All six crew members were rescued.

U.S. command said it was not known whether the $8 million plane was hit by a surface-to-air missile or a missile fired from a MiG fighter plane.

Also lost in the heavy bombing raids were two smaller jets, including another of the swing-wing F-111s.

The F-111 was the fourth of the $15 million planes lost since the controversial all-weather attack bomber returned to combat on Sept. 28. The command said it disappeared before dawn Tuesday while on a solo mission just above the demilitarized zone.

The command also reported that a marine F-4 fighter-bomber was shot down in southern Laos Monday.

Fifteen B-52 missions were reported in North Vietnam below the 20th parallel during the 24-hour period ending at noon today; topping a pre-

U.K. Immigration Curbs Threaten Tory Split

LONDON (UPI) — A government plan to allow citizens of European Common Market nations free entry into Britain but restrict immigration from British Commonwealth nations threatened today to split the ruling Conservative party.

Political sources predicted that up to 35 Conservative members of Parliament would abstain or vote against the proposal when it comes up for debate tonight in the House of Commons.

Under the government plan, Common Market citizens would be allowed to enter Britan freely to work once the country becomes part of the market Jan. 1. At the same time, Commonwealth citizens would become subject to the same immigration restrictions now applied against aliens.

Conservative member of parliament Evelyn King called the policy "inhumane" toward Australians, Canadians, New Zealanders and other Commonwealth citizens.

"That they are now to be treated as inferior in status to Italians, Ugandan Asians or Germans and denied free access to Britain is not only foolish, it is a constitutional monstrosity because the British queen is their Queen, too," he said.

King, speaking at London University, said the Commonwealth citizens were relatives and that restricting their immigration hinted at an anti-British attitude.

"It is time British governments understood that their first duty is to be pro-British and to say that they are pro-British," he said.

Political sources predict the opposition within party ranks could erase the Conservatives 26-vote majority and cause the defeat of the proposal.

The government offered its plan under the Immigration Act of 1971 and a campaign promise to set up a single system of immigration control.

1,200 Years In Jail

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Richard Speck, who once said "the chair is a good way to straighten a fellow out," sat silently in the courtroom as the judge sentenced him to serve up to 1,200 years in prison for the 1966 murders of eight nurses on Chicago's South Side.

An execution order was put off pending a number of appeals. Then on June 29, the U.S. Supreme Court declared the death penalty unconstitutional in most cases and the Illinois Supreme Court ordered a hearing to determine a new sentence for Speck.

Tuesday, Judge Richard Fitzgerald of Cook County circuit court, said: "The only fair and just sentence in this case is one in which the defendant would be confined for life."

Syrian Tactics Push Egypt

Manchester Guardian

BEIRUT — More Soviet arms were flown into Damascus Tuesday as the Syrian army and air force engaged the Israelis in some of the heaviest Mideast fighting since the 1967 war. This is the third big clash between the two countries in less than a month and the main question — if they continue — is how long Egypt can afford to do nothing comparable along the Suez canal.

The fighting stems from a new spirit of pugnacity on the part of the Syrian Baathists. In the past few weeks the Baathists have modified the tight restrictions which they had hitherto imposed on guerrilla operations in the Golan Heights. At the same time Syrian leaders have been more consistently militant in their speeches than at any time since the six-day war.

Recently the semi-official Damascus daily Al-Thaurah denounced the Mideast ceasefire as "another weapon" in the hands of the Israelis. Tuesday Damascus Radio commented: "The only language which the Arab nation must use with an enemy whose policy is based on expansionism is fighting . . . the Arab masses re waiting impatiently for the day when all the Arab armies will take part in the battle . . .".

The Baathists motives are not clear. One thing is sure. Behind this new militancy lies some political need rather than a real desire to fight. But it must be a very compelling need, for the risks are great, as Syria's losses Tuesday indicate. One factor is popular pressure for retaliation against the Israelis who, since the killings at the Munich Olympics, have carried out at least two highly devastating raids on civilians.

Since Egypt expelled its Russian experts Syria has been worried lest Egypt, like Jordan, might go it alone in a peaceful settlement, leaving Syria high and dry without the return of the Golan. Evidently with Russian encouragement, it seems to be showing the Egyptians that it can sabotage any peaceseeking initiative at its or the Russians expense. Three Antonov transport planes are reported to have arrived in Damascus Tuesday as part of a new airlift of emergency arms supplies.

In Cairo the Egyptian Cabinet was reported to have discussed the latest fighting and to have taken "the necessary measures." There's no doubt that President Anwar Sadat, facing mounting internal pressures, is deeply preoccupied about these additional ones from Damascus. He despatched his new war minister to Damascus for three days last week where, according to some reports, he agreed to put some Egyptian planes under Syrian command.

GOLAN SEALED

From AP-REUTER

The Israeli army sealed off the Golan Heights again today and kept its troops there on full alert in the wake of their big battle with Syrian forces Tuesday.

The Israeli command said the plateau, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 war, was "quiet but tense."

Damascus radio called on all Arab governments to join with Syria in repelling Israeli aggression and pledged that Syria "will retaliate against any aggression with a tougher one, irrespective of sacrifices."

How I Met Dow Jones And Other Wise Men

"No one is an innocent in the stock market," said Premier Dave Barrett the other day when asked to allay the fears of investors in the shares of B.C. Telephone. On another occasion he told a press conference of financial editors, who are said to have paled visibly, that participation in the stock market was "just like playing the ponies."

Heaven forbid that I should disagree with the premier, who is off to a good start in other ways, but on this particular matter he happens to be wrong on both counts.

There is an innocent in the stock market. Me. Or I, as the case may be. And the market is not just like playing the ponies, Mr. Barrett, not just like it at all. It is the most mysterious, baffling, aggravating and humiliating game the cunning human brain has yet devised.

I would come right out and give the name of the company in which I hold shares, but that might cause it to go into another familiar downward swoop. That is one thing I've learned. Any event, global or local, acts as a personal blow to my shares. If your wife's brother gets a head cold my stock will hear about it and go into a decline.

I have had these shares now for about eight years. They were given to me, free, gratis, by a newspaper publisher for whom I'd worked and with whom I'd fought 20 long, happy years. I accepted them as a token of his gratitude. He wouldn't have it that way. "The one sure way to turn a socialist into a capitalist is to put him in the market," he said, radiating evil. "I've finally found a way of making you one of us."

I doubted that. The shares then were unlisted. They had a theoretical par value of 50 cents each. Then, about a year later, when I was abroad, the stock was listed on the industrial board of the Vancouver Stock Exchange at $19 a share. I felt a strange sensation that seeped into every fiber of my being. It was greed, naked greed.

★ ★ ★

It was greed, too — and a little bird's tip that the stock would go to $100 a share before Christmas—that kept me from selling and re-joining the saner side of society. That, as I say, was eight years ago. Today, at noon, the stock is offered at $1.60 a share. So much for that.

It wasn't until I'd settled down in Victoria and spent the occasional lunch hour in the board room of a certain brokerage firm that I came to think of the stock market as an enormous crap game.

There's a regular company of noon-hour experts who gather there, mostly elderly. They watch the fluctuating prices much as they'd watch the ducks on Beacon Hill Park's Goodacre Lake, but every one of them is owl-wise in the mysterious ways of the market and perfectly willing — eager, indeed — to educate the innocent.

Until I joined this group I was an avid reader of the annual and special reports of the corporation in which I have this censy vested interest. Fool that I was I fancied that if "we" showed a little profit my shares would automatically go up. I was that dumb.

Now I know that some decision in Hanoi or a casual remark by a statesman in Cairo or a snowstorm in New York can have just as traumatic effect on my fiscal fortunes as any profit-or-loss statement. My little share certificate is like the last domino that will fall if any other domino anywhere in the world is so much as nudged. Or, to switch metaphors, it is a piece of Kleenex blowing in the winds of a windy world.

When my stock took one of its periodic dips immmediately after the federal election it was in no way surprising to the old board room codgers who simply shook their heads and told me, "Minority government, you understand. Always dislocates the market."

From this I naturally assumed that the subsequent triumph at the polls of Richard Milhous Nixon, would bring the roses to the cheeks of my shares. But, no. "The New York market had already compensated for the Nixon win in anticipation," I was told in a tone of voice that wondered where I might have been.

New York, in fact, is always on the minds of my board room advisors. There was almost a party mood last week, for instance, when the Dow Jones Industrial Average, an indicator made up of 30 blue chip stocks on the New York exchange, climbed over the 1000-mark.

As New York goes, I was told, so goes Toronto. As Toronto goes so goes Vancouver. How come, then, that my own shares marked this happy occasion by dropping a nickle? "There are always exceptions that prove the rule," my advisor replied, smiling a Mona Lisa smile.

Peace, itself, is on the minds of them all. Boy, you just never saw so many peace-lovers! Day after day, I'm told, there's an exchange of the latest news from Paris, Washington, Hanoi and Saigon. "Will the carnage never stop?" I heard one sweet, white-haired man cry one noon-hour, scanning the mining board. "How can the intermediate and longer term outlook improve until it does?"

Well, as I say, it's all been an eye-opener to me and I must say I've nothing but envy for the premier. I wish I was an innocent again and just played the ponies. The stock market is playing me and that's not half as much fun.

Mushroom Experiments Lead to Final 'Trip'

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

People who experiment in the "mind-expanding" qualities of a common B.C. mushroom are taking their lives in their own hand, provincial botanist Adam Szczawinski warned today.

The mushroom is the Fly Agaric — otherwise know as the sacred mushroom.

Known since ancient times for its hallucinating and inebriating properties, it grows in the Greater Victoria area and elsewhere on Vancouver Island.

It is scientifically called Amanita Muscaria and is listed in mushroom books as poisonous.

Szczawinski is concerned at the growing interest of drug-oriented people in the mushroom.

"Anyone who experiments with this mushroom is mad," he said. "we don't know yet what after-effects it has on the body and brain. An overdose can be deadly. It's no mushroom to play around with unless taken under medical supervision.

The mushroom is about 12 inches wide. It is brilliant scarlet or orange and covered with creamy warts.

That the Fly Agaric is a hallucinogenic mushroom and capable of taking a person "on a trip" has been known for at least 4,000 years. According to ancient writings those who ate or drank its juice got a feeling of elation or ecstasy — so powerful that they felt they were sharing the life of immortals.

★

It was used by magicians to make prophecies. In Siberia the mushroom seems to have been eaten to get drunk.

TODAY some of the mushroom's alkaloids are being used in tranquillizers.

Szczawinski said other poisonous mushrooms are found on Vancouver Island during this season and should be avoided.

(Greater Victoria hospital's report no serious poisoning cases but said about 12 persons who felt sick after eating mushrooms had their stomach pumped out as a precautionary measure.)

The Panther Agaric, also a member of the Amanita family, was one of them, he said. It is also hallucinogenic. It is pale than to pale yellowish-brown or dark brown and covered by whitish warts.

He said the dread Amanita Phalloides, sometimes called the "death cap," has been reported in British Columbia but has not yet been identified scientifically. The mushroom has killed three persons in the last two weeks in California.

"It is an eastern mushroom which has spread to California and now appears to be moving northward," he said. "A few years ago one was found near Seattle."

The mushroom grows to a height of 14 inches and has a distinctive brassy green color on its top, he said. It seems to favor the moist humus of hillside oak forests.

"Just a tiny bit of this mushroom, let's say the size of your fingernail, is enough to kill you," he said. "If you ever pick one up, you should wash your hands after.

"It is possible that there could be a sporadic occurrence of this species in British Columbia," he added. "The best defence against poisonous mushrooms is to pick only those you know or can identify."

★

Szczawinski said Vancouver Island is one the province's most prolific mushroom gardens where half of the North American species can be found in the woods, fields and backyards.

There are many excellent species, he said, and it doesn't take much training to become familiar with them and to recognize them on sight.

He listed a few unmistakable ones that are safe, such as Shaggy Mane, Oyster and Cauliflower mushroom.

He said the number of poisonous species is small compared to the total number of mushrooms.

It also has often happened that what a person has assumed to be mushroom poisoning was just a combination of things, such as eating too much, he said.

He said fear of suspected poisoning can also make a person feel sick.

"If a person starts worrying, he may bring on real symptoms and ill effects," he explained. "But no case of suspected mushroom poisoning should be treated lightly. See your physician."

Major Land Purchase Approved

Saanich Puts Up $223,350 for Future Housing, Beautification and Parks

Panama Flats—part of plan to save Colquitz

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Land acquisitions totalling $223,350 have been approved by Saanich council for future housing beautification and park projects at four locations in the south-central sector of the municipality.

Two-thirds of the cost will go to secure 38 acres in the Roy Road-Panama Flats area as a nucleus for preservation of open space and a land bank for housing, lands and housing chairman Ald. Edith Gunning explained today.

Council action is the result of some two years of planning and negotiations by land department staff.

"We had to work in secret because people have been asking such high prices for land" with development of the Saanich sewer enterprise area, the alderman said.

Options have been taken by Saanich for the initial 38 acres with a value of about $147,000.

Funds are expected to be borrowed in accordance with special legislation granted Saanich for Colquitz River preservation. Up to $1 million may be borrowed for this purpose, said administrator John Tribe.

With participation of federal and provincial governments funds could be borrowed temporarily until suitable parcels of the acreage could be sold for housing.

Mrs. Gunning said the action was aimed at not only preservation of an agricultural open area on the Colquitz flood plain — Panama Flats — but stabilization of the land market and provision of attractive housing sites on the part not subject to flooding.

Bank to Curb Speculation

Council's position is supported by a study completed last summer by University of B.C. researchers and financed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. It confirmed the use of municipal land banks as a control on the speculative land market.

Mrs. Gunning said land sales could be both for individual, single family development or "perhaps some cluster housing."

Under the National Housing Act the purchase of land by an individual may represent down payment on the cost of constructing a house, which for many people is the only way mortgage funds may be secured.

Mrs. Gunning said it is not intended to stir false hopes of sewer expansion in the minds of land owners in that area, nor among prospective land owners.

The next area slated for sewer expansion is Royal Oak where Broadmead is developing a satellite community.

Sewer expansion, the alderman noted, must meet criteria for the public good and not be based on individual needs or requests.

Most of the Colquitz land involved will remain in agricultural use, but eventually, with future acquisitions the proportion of farmland and green space to housing land could decline.

Second largest amount aproved for land purchases is $39,750 for several parcels at Rutledge and Cloverdale to make about two acres available for a community park-play area in a district which needs such space "desperately," according to assistant planner Gil Laurenson.

A former playground in that neighborhood was incorporated in Scotia Green community housing project, about a block east of the proposed park. Rutledge could be closed to traffic access at Cloverdale.

Three properties worth $29,400 will acquired on the Gorge between Gorge View and Tillicum bridge for unspecified future waterway improvement.

Finally, parts of private property at the north end of the former McRae estate — now Cedar Hill Park — will be secured for $7,200 to preserve Queensbury Pond as a wildlife sancuary.

Displacement of Workers Holds Up Sandringham Pact

Nearly all the issues in the Sandringham Private Hospital strike have been resolved, co-owner Russell Shepherd said today.

But one important issue remains, he added — the returning to work of the strikers and the resulting displacement of those hired to take their places.

Alex Markides, staff representative for the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said as far as he understands "everything is agreed to except signatures and dates on a return to work."

He declined comment on Shepherd's remarks except to say the union is awaiting his signature on the new contract.

But it is another document, a return to work agreement, which has yet to be resolved before the end may be in sight for Victoria's longest-ever strike, nearly 26 months old.

And, hanging in the background, is a question mark over private hospital costs and the future of private hospital care in British Columbia.

Sandringham and CUPE Local 1311 have held three negotiating meetings — the last Nov. 10 — since Labor Minister Bill King persuaded hospital management to meet the union. The talks were the first since before the strike began Sept. 30, 1970.

"Ninety-five per cent of the clauses we have worked out and are acceptable," Shepherd said today.

He received a copy of the agreement Tuesday — but said it is not ready to be signed.

"I am trying to resolve a method we can live with to work the people back in," he said.

"At this moment I have not worked out the method and I have no intention of dismissing 24 people overnight. That is the stumbling block."

Shepherd said that "possibly" he will be meeting the union next week, but not until he has met Health Minister Dennis Cocke.

He said he wants to discuss with Cocke private hospital costs, including the ultimate effect of the minimum wage when it reaches $2.50 an hour in the summer of 1974, and the whole future of private hospital care of the elderly under the new government.

Ministers in the New Democratic Party government have repeated a philosophy that they are not in favor of profit-making in the health care field. But private hospitals with problems because of the minimum wage increase can apply to the government for a subsidy.

There has been speculation that the government will raise rates paid to private hospitals for care of those on welfare.

The Sandringham strikers had originally sought a wage scale ranging from the old $1.50 an hour minimum wage to $2 an hour. But the bigger issue has been job security and the protection of a union contract.

FIRE VICTIM DIES

A 37-year-old Esquimalt man, who suffered burns Nov. 16 when a $20,000 fire destroyed a home at 1225 Juno, died Tuesday in Victoria General Hospital.

Gordon Scott was the last of 10 persons to escape the fire. He threw himself from a ground floor window with his clothing ablaze.

His brother, Edward Scott, 31, three other adults and five children escaped with minor injuries.

Coroner Edmund St. Jorre said an inquiry will be held.

Firefighters Voting On New Contract Today

City firefighters were to vote on a new contract with Victoria this afternoon.

Fred (Whitey) Severson, president of Local 730 of the International Association of Firefighters, said this morning he is confident of membership ratification.

He declined to release details of the proposed new contract until after they have been given to and voted on by the members, except to say "the wage package is reasonable."

City council is expected to make its decision at a meeting Thursday.

'Mickey Mouse' Beacons Slammed

Modern rescue beacons in airplanes are "Mickey Mouse affairs that are inneffective and inadequate," a well-known local pilot said today.

Roy Parrett, former B.C. director of the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association and former president of the association's local branch, said four persons missing in a twin-engine Beechcraft in the Arctic since Nov. 8 would have a better chance of rescue if the plane had a strong rescue beacon.

Most modern beacons have only one-tenth of a watt power, and are powered by pen light cells, Parrett said.

Pilots were better off with the old Search and Rescue and Homing (SARAH) rescue beacons made by the armed forces that were used until a few years ago, Parrett said. The large SARAH beacon had a 15-watt power so would last a lot longer, he said.

"It was almost indestructible," Parrett said "You could put it in a refrigerator or in the blazing sun, pound it with a hammer or drop it on the floor, and it still worked," he said.

Parrett is angered by the fact that there are no government standards regulating rescue beacons for planes.

"What we really need is a 1972 SARAH," he said.

PARRETT
. . . SARAH fan

The pen light cells that power modern beacons are "very ineffective" in freezing temperatures, he said.

Parrett said he brought the problem before the spring meeting of the Canadian owners and pilots association, but got no support. People thought he was criticizing beacons in general, he said.

"I'm not really against beacons but I'm against Mickey Mouse beacons," he explained.

Parrett said the commercially-made beacons will last only eight hours whereas the armed forces SARAH last for days if a plane is down in the bush.

However, a spokesman for the Rescue Co-ordinating Centre here said most modern beacons will last for 48 hours in 40 degree below zero weather.

The SARAH was bigger and more cumbersome than modern beacons, he said, because it used large expensive batteries. Also, it had no equipment to turn it on automatically if passengers were incapacitated in a crash, said the spokesman.

Because the government does not set standards for rescue beacons, the department of transport has prepared a list of approved beacons, he said.

FRIDGE DEATH SPARKS PROBE

An investigation into hazardous consumer products was ordered by Attorney-General Alex MacDonald today, following the death Monday of an Esquimalt boy in an abandoned refrigerator.

"The attorney-general is very concerned about hazardous products, especially after this tragic death," MacDonald's executive secretary Adrian Wong said.

"He has asked the consumer affairs department to investigate the problem and to look at protective legislation in other provinces, especially in Ontario."

Wong said he didn't know if it was possible to make specific legislation on the problem of refrigerators, but said the consumer affairs branch is investigating this possibility.

MacDonald has ordered a report to be made as quickly as possible, Wong said.

No Different on Road —Cats Don't Know It

"There really isn't any great difference between playing at home or on the road," Victoria Cougar coach Mitch Pechet declared early in the Western Canada Hockey League season.

His charges, however ,are performing as if there is a difference.

The Cougars suffered a 9-0 humiliation Tuesday night in Saskatoon. Regina Pats handed Victoria an 8-2 beating Monday as the Cougars opened a six-game Prairie swing.

Victoria's travels take the club to Winnipeg tonight and Pechet undoubtedly will place great emphasis on defensive hockey. It just hasn't been there in Victoria's first two starts on the Prairies.

And Pechet may make his views on road travel known to his players in hopes of giving them some psychological help.

"In the old days, there was a definite advantage to playing at home," he said in an earlier interview. "Homer refereeing was prevalent. In addition, the differences in some rinks were as obvious as night and day, especially in size and lighting.

"Today, there is standardization in size, lighting and, yes, even officiating."

The differences that existed Tuesday were strictly between Saskatoon's Blades and the Cougars. The Blades, running their unbeaten streak to eight games, were sharp. The Cougars, playing their third game in four days, weren't.

Pechet regarded the outing as "our flattest performance of the year."

The Blades jumped into a 2-0 lead after the first period, then turned the game into a rout by pumping in five goals in the first six minutes of the second.

Blades peppered 57 shots at an overworked Sam Clegg while Cougars managed only 17 drives at Ed Humphrey.

Cougars played without defenceman Cal Kitching, who suffered a break in a small wrist bone in Monday's game in Regina.

Dennis Abgrall scored two goals and set up a third. Seven other players contributed a goal apiece and the Jack McLeod-coached Blades showed a well-balanced attack before 2,083 fans.

The loss left Cougars sharing the Western Division basement with Vancouver Nats, who suffered a 9-2 beating at the hands of Swift Current Broncos.

Elsewhere, a late goal by Jerry Holland with his club playing a man short proved the winner as Calgary Centennials nipped Winnipeg 4-3. It was Holland's second goal of the game.

Terry McDougall sparked Broncos ,who picked up their first win in three starts on the West Coast, by scoring two goals and drawing three assists.

After Loss Foster Says Ali Can't Beat Frazier

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — Former heavyweight champion Muhammed Ali still says that Joe Frazier, the only man who has beaten him, is wearing a crown "too heavy for his brow."

But Bob Foster, who lost by an eighth-round knockout to Ali Tuesday night, landed a left jab that cut the ex-champ early in the fight and later cut Ali with his remarks.

"I don't think he can punch like Frazier," said Foster, the reigning light heavy champion who was knocked out in the second round by Frazier in a 1970 heavyweight title match.

"I don't think he can beat him."

Ali sat quietly, holding an ice pack to the swelling left side of his face as he listened to Foster's comments during a postfight conference. Then he repeated what he's been saying since losing a 15-round decision 20 months ago in the biggest money event in boxing history:

"I want Frazier. I don't want the division to die because the champion is killing it."

Frazier has fought just two unranked opponents, for a total of eight rounds, since beating Ali, who has gone into the ring nine times for a total of 86 rounds in that period.

Foster, who at 180 was outweighed by 41 pounds, gave Ali some of the roughest rounds in his 41-fight pro career despite being knocked down seven times. Foster went down the final time 40 seconds into the eighth round.

"He's a great, great fighter," said Ali. "I've got a cut and a bruise. That's something that Frazier nor anyone else couldn't do to me.

Ali was guaranteed $250,000 for the scheduled 12-rounder in the theatre showroom of the Sahara-Tahoe Hotel. Foster, whose ring record is now 49-6, received $125,000.

The heavyweight division spotlight now shifts from this ski and gambling resort area to Jamaica, where Frazier is scheduled to meet unbeaten George Foreman, ranked the No. 2 contender behind Ali, on Jan. 22.

"If he fights George Foreman and whups him, that will make up for his idleness," Ali said. "He's fighting a good man—the best besides me."

Foster, 6-foot-4, looked like a basketball player in the ring with his heavier opponent.

Foster said he was bothered by the weight difference, but more by Ali's quick and constant lefts that kept him from scoring with his own dangerous left hooks.

"A guy who weighs 221 pounds isn't supposed to have hands that fast," said Foster.

Ali concluded, "He didn't know I was as fast as I am and I didn't know he was as good as he is."

Foster said he plans to defend his title next month, although no match is set yet, and Ali will soon take off on an exhibition tour that will include several stops in the Far East.

He Took On The Octupus, Now Mr. Grumpy Is Gone

There are some people you don't forget, or incidents relating to them either.

For weeks the maill slot had been filled to overflowing with missives from Seattle, a conglamoration of press releases, facts and figures, trivia, but mostly all about one, Pete Rademacher.

Rademacher was the Olympic heavyweight boxing champion and, despite the fact that he had never won, or even had, one professional bout, suddenly he was to be in a fight for the world's heavyweight championship.

The genius who had masterminded this seemingly impossible coup was Jack Hurley of Seattle, one of boxing's most flamboyant promoters. A master of frothy prose, his press releases were a joy indeed and, by the sheer bulk of them, couldn't be ignored. Besides, he was his own boss, afraid of nobody in boxing, or even the one-time octupus of the sport, the International Boxing Club.

With a rickety typewriter, Hurley took on his own press campaign to build up his fighters, and even challenged the mighty IBC, before the supreme court in the U.S. dissolved it as a monopoly.

Thus it was that Rademacher found himself in a ring in Sicks Stadium one summer night in 1957 with Floyd Patterson, then heavyweight champion of the world.

Rademacher got himself knocked out for his troubles, but the fight was a huge success, and grossed about $260,000, a fair take in those days.

A House Fighter Is Flushed Out

If Hurley had produced the impossible then, he did it another time, too.

This occasion Harry "Kid" Mathews was the central figure from the coast. Hurley wrote so many press releases extolling the virtues of Matthews that even the nation's press believed it, and demanded that the IBC put up its house fighter, Rocky Marciano, against the blown-up middleweight from Seattle.

The fight lasted only two rounds, but Hurley and Matthews had a $50,000 guarantee as their end of the bargain.

Which brings up another story of Hurley. When Matthews first came to Hurley, he objected to the manager cutting him 50 per cent instead of the usual 33⅓ per cent.

Hurley replied: "You've been fighting 10 years. How much money have you got? Nothing. You need me more than I need you . . . etc. Matthews finally retired a richer man than before he met Hurley.

Hurley made his home in the Olympic hotel in Seattle. The lobby was his outer office, his room was the inner sanctum. Tickets he sometimes distributed from an old felt hat, and he peered at visitors though thick glasses with lenses as thick as the bottoms of pop bottles.

He was a chronic complainer, but it came honestly. He had as many as 32 operations, 24 on his sinuses alone, and two-thirds of his stomach had been cut out.

About Guns, Gals, and 'Great'

A quiet, peaceful man, there were times when he was "forced" to carry a gun.

Vince Foster, one of his boys, was "a cuckoo," Hurley once said. "He was preaching when he was picked up on a rape charge. He said I was the devil, and that's when I started carrying a gun." When Hurley had Matthews, he also toted a pistol. Some hoodlums from the East wanted part of the action, but Hurley wasn't giving any away.

In latter years, Hurley still had the odd club fighter, but in all his years in the boxing game, at least 50, his biggest disappointment was that he never had a champion.

The Fargo Express, Billy Petrolle, was probably his best boy. Petrolle beat nine champions in his time, but all in overweight bouts. Then when he fought Tony Canzoneri for the title, he lost. At last report Petrolle was operating two religious goods stores in Duluth.

There was one thing about Hurley — he was always willing to hold court for visiting press. "Tickets? Sure, for a Canadian, anytime," he replied at the time of the Rademacher-Patterson set-to. "I may want to let you see one of my boys up there sometime," he said. In later years, on other visits, he would expound on his favorite sport, and often did.

Hurley blamed television for the decline in boxing, and fast women ("creatures" he called them) for the decline in his fighters. Jack Dempsey, he once said, was the best heavyweight, but Mike Gibbons and Henry Armstrong were the only fighters he would call "great."

But now only his stories will live on. Jack Hurley, Mr. Grumpy himself, died last week, where he lived. In his office at home in the Olympic.

Ticats Getting Back to Basics

HAMILTON (CP) — Ignoring all the fancy terminology of football —wishbone, audibles, blitzes, red dogs, et al — Jerry Williams, coach of Hamilton Tiger-Cats, said Tuesday his team has to "block, tackle," if it's to beat Ottawa Rough Riders Sunday.

Hamilton has to overcome a 12-point deficit — the Ticats lost 19-7 in the first of the two-game, total-point Eastern Football Conference final last Saturday — to gain a berth in the Grey Cup.

All Williams would say about his club's chances was, "We have a chance."

He won't make any lineup changes for the game.

"There's no reason to change now. We won 10 games in a row and we beat them (Ottawa) three times. There's no reason to change."

Being behind after the first game of the conference finals isn't new to the Ticats, but there's a difference this time:

In former years, Hamilton's muscle had been able to overcome the deficit. This time, the Riders built their lead with a show of strength, dominating Hamilton physically.

Jon Hohman, a veteran of the Tiger-Cat offensive line which was criticized for its sieve-like performance in Saturday's game, said the Riders threw a few new, unexpected alignments at them.

"For instance they would come up in an alignment and then switch positions just before the ball went into play. We picked it up, but at first it was upsetting — just for a split second, but that's enough."

He credited Ottawa's defence for excellent timing.

"They were so fast off the mark they were offside a couple of times and weren't called for it."

Tiger-Cat players, who practised on muddy natural turf in preparation for the opening game in Ottawa, didn't think it would help the Rough Riders to work out on the artificial turf in Toronto, as they are contemplating.

"They're different kinds of turf — it's Astro turf here and Tartan in Toronto," said one player.

The Ticats feel their turf offers better traction.

CBC Pays $1.2 Million To Televise CFL Games

TORONTO (CP) — The CBC has outbid CTV for the rights to telecast 1973 Canadian Football League games, paying an estimated $1.2 million to have the first pick on which games it will show.

CFL games will be split between the two networks, with the CBC carrying Saturday games and CTV those on Sunday and some in mid-week.

This year's schedule, including the Grey Cup game, cost CTV $1.45 million.

The exact price paid for the 1973 rights hasn't been revealed. However, a news conference has been called for next Monday to announce the switch.

Allowing CTV to have Sunday games leaves the CBC free to continue importing National Football League games on Sunday.

The CBC has long been after the CFL to play more Saturday games in the early part of the schedule. It also has demanded the right to show some Regina games in other parts of Saskatchhewan instead of blacking out the whole province.

"It's a very happy thing for the football people, since both networks bid aggressively," said John Bassett, controlling shareholder in both CFTO, which handles Ottawa and Hamilton games for CTV, and the Argonaut Football Club.

Winnipeg Flies Right Without It's Jet

By The Canadian Press

Despite being without its Jet, Winnipeg had enough power Tuesday night to leave Houston well behind in World Hockey Association play.

Bobby Hull, the Golden Jet of Winnipeg, was grounded by a court order issued Monday in Chicago which said he couldn't play because a $2.5 million bond hadn't been posted by the WHA as required by an earlier court ruling.

However, lawyers for Hull filed an appeal of the court order and asked the Illinois Appellate Court for an emergency hearing to have it dissolved.

Hull said Tuesday he hoped the situation would be cleared up by Thursday when the Jets again play in Houston. As it is, he's the highest paid non-player in the sports world. He jumped from Chicago Black Hawks of the National Hockey League to the Jets for a contract calling for $2.75 million.

Meanwhile, his mates on the ice were more than the Aeros could handle as Winnipeg took a 4-2 decision and improved its hold on first-place in the Western Division.

In other games, Minnesota Fighting Saints defeated Alberta Oilers 4-3 in overtime; Ottawa Nationals downed Quebec les Nordiques 4-2 and Cleveland Crusaders hammered Los Angeles Sharks 5-2.

In Houston, with 4,643 fans on hand, Chris Bordeleau scored his 16th and 17th goals of the season, both unassisted, to pace the Jet win.

Ab McDonald and Cal Swenson got the other Jet goals with Gord Labossiere scoring both Aeros' goals.

Cleveland got the top-notch goaltending it expects from former Boston Bruin Gerry Cheevers, who stopped 46 Los Angeles shots, 20 in the first period.

In the first, the Crusaders fired 12 shots at Russ Gillow in the Sharks' net and got two past him—Ron Buchanan's 12th of the season and the first of two by Dick Pumple. Cheevers handled the LA shots flawlessly.

Ted Hampson, a journeyman in the NHL, scored at 6:42 of overtime to give Minnesota its win over Alberta.

Goals by George Morrison and Fred Speck set up the overtime.

In an all-Canadian affair in Ottawa watched by just 2,746 fans, the Nationals withstood a les Nordiques rally for a 4-2 decision.

Ottawa forged ahead 4-0 on first-period goals by Rick Sentes, Guy Trottier and Ron Climie and a second-period score by Wayne Carleton.

Alain Caron and Michel Archambault scored on power plays, with J. C. Tremblay getting assists on both, to narrow the margin. However, Ottawa goalie Les Binkley closed the door and the third period was scoreless.

Is Reid Looking for a Buyer?

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Is the Reid Centre site for sale or isn't it?

The $13 million question was puzzling city hall officials, aldermen, realtors and others today following the circulation of a real estate firm's 40-page report dealing with the proposed Wharf Street development and its investment potential.

One news report this morning said the controversial project of Vancouver developer J. A. Reid appears to be up for sale before the first footings have been laid or the first bucket of cement poured.

But from several sides today, including well-informed realtors, the Times was told that the situation is by no means clear and there is no solid basis for assuming any selling intentions on Reid's part.

From Reid's Vancouver office the only comment of any sort offered in clarification was a categorical denial of the newspaper report by a woman clerical assistant.

"As far as this office is concerned it's just not true," she said, adding that Reid himself is away until next week.

From a series of interviews this reporter found no one in Victoria prepared to make a firm interpretation of the National Trust Company brochure which bears the title of Victoria realtor John A. Relling and is dated September, 1972.

But these are some of the guesses as to Reid's motive in commissioning the report by a Vancouver firm of consulting economists and engineers:

1. Reid may have every intention of proceeding with the massive, hotel-residential complex, for which he was awarded a land-use contract by city council last June. But he wants to arrange sale of the property in advance.

2. His original source of financing may have fallen through and he is now looking for syndicate financing.

3. Reid has been unable to find any financing for the scheme because his original, higher-density proposal created so much furore that he agreed to scale it down — and the final compromtlse may be considered economically unfeasible by the mortgage lenders.

As a result he "want's out."

But one prominent realtor discounted the third possiibility on the grounds that Reid "wouldn't go through all this" for what is, in effect, a straightforward land sale.

"All this" is a comprehensive, detailed report including extensive background information on the proposal; the site's strategic location ("undoubtedly the most spectacular development in North America in terms of land utilization and consumer service . . ."); estimates of income and expenditure for both the hotel and commercial aspects of the site; and return on sale of condominiums.

"It's a fine, solid presentation," one realtor said in admiration.

B.C. Cools Olympic Hopes

Premier Barrett indicated today it is "most unlikely" his government will give financial support to bring the beleaguered 1976 winter Olympic games to British Columbia.

But the federal government, through Health Minister John Munro, said Ottawa is willing to stand by its original commitment of $10 million towards the games . . . if B.C. maintains its original position on financing.

And he added, if the province renews its "over-all commitment" on the original application, Ottawa may consider revising upwards its contribution.

Under the Social Credit government of two years ago, B.C. pledged up to $10 millions towards the estimated $21 million cost to bring the games here.

Barrett said the government definitely will not spend "a lot of money" just to have the Olympics held in B.C. He said estimated costs of a highway built between Vancouver and the Garibaldi site, according to Highways Minister Bob Strachan, would run to about $48 million.

"We're not going to spend that kind of money," Barrett said. "We can build an awful lot of chronic care hospitals with that kind of money."

Barrett told reporters he has received no official representations from anyone connected with the Vancouver bid to stage the winter games. And he said that even if representations had been received, it would be "most unlikely" that B.C. would contribute financially.

Later, Barrett's office released a form letter which is being sent out to any persons who have written the premier about possible B.C. participation in the games.

Barrett's letter reads: "Thank you for your recent letter concerning the possibility of British Columbia being the site of the 1976 Winter Olympics.

ONTARIO BOOSTS PUBLIC TRANSIT

TORONTO (CP) — A $1.3-billion plan to encourage public transit in Ontario cities and towns during the next decade was revealed today by Premier William Davis.

The plan, which applies to smaller communities as well as larger urban centres, would have the provincial government pay 75 per cent of costs of building new public transportation facilities to shift emphasis away from urban expressways.

Emphasizing "people first," the plan calls for transportation systems capable of carrying 10,000 to 20,000 passengers an hour.

"In these days of advancing technology, it would be folly to continue to rely solely on the present-day use of the automobile and our other existing systems of transportation," the premier said.

"We now have before us a unique opportunity to move forward from pollution and bumper-to-bumper traffic jams."

"With the multitude of demands on limited public funds, we must find less expensive ways to move people."

The premier told members of the Ontario legislature and municipal leaders gathered at the Science Centre to hear the policy statement that not only have expressways become prohibitively expensive within city boundaries, but so have subways.

"Our technical people tell us that subway construction costs have reached such a high level that few municipalities throughout the world can continue their construction," said Davis.

Fiery Death of a Film Stuntman

Dangerous Cold Pills Face Ban

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal food and drug directorate has taken the first step towards banning the sale of pain killers containing both phenacetin and salicylates (aspirin). Many headache and cold tablets would be affected.

In a trade letter to drug makers released today, the directorate announced proposed regulations to end the wholesale trade in such compounds by May 1. Retail outlets could continue to sell off their existing stocks after that date.

Use of combinations of phenacetin and aspirin has been blamed for kidney damage and other medical disorders. A recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal criticized use of the combination products and said doctors and the public should be made aware of the dangers.

One study reported in the journal said one in every 20 persons taking dialysis treatment for damaged kidneys is the victim of such combination drugs. Such products had to be taken in large numbers for a long time before harm is done.

In an interview today, P. A. Soucy, special assistant to the director of the drug directorate, said the proposed ban would affect "a good number of products" still on the market, including Excedrin. Two years ago, more than 300 over-the-counter products contained the combination.

Many manufacturers of popular brands of tablets that previously contained both phenacetin and aspirin had taken the step on their own already, he said.

For example, Frosst removed phenacetin from their headache tablets voluntarily about one year ago, he said. Anacin did the same even earlier when the first reports of dangers began.

Manufacturers have until Jan. 15 to make representation against the proposed changes.

Travel Ban Lifted

THURMONT, Md. (AP) — President Nixon lifted today a rigid government ban on travel of United States aircraft and ships to China. The action, announced by a spokesman at Nixon's Camp David, Md., retreat, is a first step toward eventual establishment of scheduled U.S. air and sea service to China.

Body in Lift

TORONTO (CP) — A 53-year-old Minden, Ont., man visiting the city was beaten to death in a downtown hotel Tuesday night and his body stuffed into an elevator. Police said the victim, William Morgan Mark, was attacked in a third-floor room and then dragged to the elevator of the Waverley Hotel. The elevator was then sent to the lobby. A guest entering the elevator door in the lobby almost tripped over the body.

Montrealer Axed

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have arrested a Vietnamese student in connection with the axe slaying of one man and the wounding of another Tuesday night. A man about 25 was found in the second-floor apartment with his head cut off. Another man was slashed in the arms and chest.

First B-52 Lost

Times News Services

SAIGON — A United States B-52 bomber was shot down today in the heaviest attack of the war on North Vietnam.

It was the first of the giant bombers shot down in the war. All six crew members were rescued.

U.S. command said it was not known whether the $8 million plane was hit by a surface-to-air missile or a missile fired from a MiG fighter plane.

Also lost in the heavy bombing raids were two smaller jets, including another of the swing-wing F-111s.

The F-111 was the fourth of the $15 million planes lost since the controversial all-weather attack bomber returned to combat on Sept. 28. The command said it disappeared before dawn Tuesday while on a solo mission just above the demilitarized zone.

The command also reported that a marine F-4 fighter-bomber was shot down in southern Laos Monday.

Fifteen B-52 missions were reported in North Vietnam below the 20th parallel during the 24-hour period ending at noon today; topping a pre-

U.K. Immigration Curbs Threaten Tory Split

LONDON (UPI) — A government plan to allow citizens of European Common Market nations free entry into Britain but restrict immigration from British Commonwealth nations threatened today to split the ruling Conservative party.

Political sources predicted that up to 35 Conservative members of Parliament would abstain or vote against the proposal when it comes up for debate tonight in the House of Commons.

Under the government plan, Common Market citizens would be allowed to enter Britan freely to work once the country becomes part of the market Jan. 1. At the same time, Commonwealth citizens would become subject to the same immigration restrictions now applied against aliens.

Conservative member of parliament Evelyn King called the policy "inhumane" toward Australians, Canadians, New Zealanders and other Commonwealth citizens.

"That they are now to be treated as inferior in status to Italians, Ugandan Asians or Germans and denied free access to Britain is not only foolish, it is a constitutional monstrosity because the British queen is their Queen, too," he said.

King, speaking at London University, said the Commonwealth citizens were relatives and that restricting their immigration hinted at an anti-British attitude.

"It is time British governments understood that their first duty is to be pro-British and to say that they are pro-British," he said.

Political sources predict the opposition within party ranks could erase the Conservatives 26-vote majority and cause the defeat of the proposal.

The government offered its plan under the Immigration Act of 1971 and a campaign promise to set up a single system of immigration control.

1,200 Years In Jail

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Richard Speck, who once said "the chair is a good way to straighten a fellow out," sat silently in the courtroom as the judge sentenced him to serve up to 1,200 years in prison for the 1966 murders of eight nurses on Chicago's South Side.

An execution order was put off pending a number of appeals. Then on June 29, the U.S. Supreme Court declared the death penalty unconstitutional in most cases and the Illinois Supreme Court ordered a hearing to determine a new sentence for Speck.

Tuesday, Judge Richard Fitzgerald of Cook County circuit court, said: "The only fair and just sentence in this case is one in which the defendant would be confined for life."

Syrian Tactics Push Egypt

Manchester Guardian

BEIRUT — More Soviet arms were flown into Damascus Tuesday as the Syrian army and air force engaged the Israelis in some of the heaviest Mideast fighting since the 1967 war. This is the third big clash between the two countries in less than a month and the main question — if they continue — is how long Egypt can afford to do nothing comparable along the Suez canal.

The fighting stems from a new spirit of pugnacity on the part of the Syrian Baathists. In the past few weeks the Baathists have modified the tight restrictions which they had hitherto imposed on guerrilla operations in the Golan Heights. At the same time Syrian leaders have been more consistently militant in their speeches than at any time since the six-day war.

Recently the semi-official Damascus daily Al-Thaurah denounced the Mideast cease-fire as "another weapon" in the hands of the Israelis. Tuesday Damascus Radio commented: "The only language which the Arab nation must use with an enemy whose policy is based on expansionism is fighting . . . the Arab masses re waiting impatiently for the day when all the Arab armies will take part in the battle . . ."

The Baathists motives are not clear. One thing is sure. Behind this new militancy lies some political need rather than a real desire to fight. But it must be a very compelling need, for the risks are great, as Syria's losses Tuesday indicate. One factor is popular pressure for retaliation against the Israelis who, since the killings at the Munich Olympics, have carried out at least two highly devastating raids on civilians.

Since Egypt expelled its Russian experts Syria has been worried lest Egypt, like Jordan, might go it alone in a peaceful settlement, leaving Syria high and dry without the return of the Golan. Evidently with Russian encouragement, it seems to be showing the Egyptians that it can sabotage any peace-seeking initiative at its or the Russians expense. Three Antonov transport planes are reported to have arrived in Damascus Tuesday as part of a new airlift of emergency arms supplies.

In Cairo the Egyptian cabinet was reported to have discussed the latest fighting and to have taken "the necessary measures." There's no doubt that President Anwar Sadat, facing mounting internal pressures, is deeply preoccupied about these additional ones from Damascus. He dispatched his new war minister to Damascus for three days last week where, according to some reports, he agreed to put some Egyptian planes under Syrian command.

GOLAN SEALED

From AP-REUTER

The Israeli army sealed off the Golan Heights again today and kept its troops there on full alert in the wake of their big battle with Syrian forces Tuesday.

The Israeli command said the plateau, which Israel seized from Syria in the 1967 war, was "quiet but tense."

Damascus radio called on all Arab governments to join with Syria in repelling Israeli aggression and pledged that Syria "will retaliate against any aggression with a tougher one, irrespective of sacrifices."

Is Reid Looking for a Buyer?

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Is the Reid Centre site for sale or isn't it?

The $13 million question was puzzling city hall officials, aldermen, realtors and others today following the circulation of a real estate firm's 40-page report dealing with the proposed Wharf Street development and its investment potential.

One news report this morning said the controversial project of Vancouver developer J. A. Reid appears to be up for sale before the first footings have been laid or the first bucket of cement poured.

But from several sides today, including well-informed realtors, the Times was told that the situation is by no means clear and there is no solid basis for assuming any selling intentions on Reid's part.

From Reid's Vancouver office the only comment of any sort offered in clarification was a categorical denial of the newspaper report by a woman clerical assistant.

"As far as this office is concerned it's just not true," she said, adding that Reid himself is away until next week.

From a series of interviews this reporter found no one in Victoria prepared to make a firm interpretation of the National Trust Company brochure which bears the title of Victoria realtor John A. Relling and is dated September, 1972.

But these are some of the guesses as to Reid's motive in commissioning the report by a Vancouver firm of consulting economists and engineers:

1. Reid may have every intention of proceeding with the massive, hotel-residential complex, for which he was awarded a land-use contract by city council last June. But he wants to arrange sale of the property in advance.

2. His original source of financing may have fallen through and he is now looking for syndicate financing.

3. Reid has been unable to find any financing for the scheme because his original, higher-density proposal created so much furore that he agreed to scale it down — and the final compromtise may be considered economically unfeasible by the mortgage lenders.

As a result he "want's out."

But one prominent realtor discounted the third possibility on the grounds that Reid "wouldn't go through all this" for what is, in effect, a straightforward land sale.

"All this" is a comprehensive, detailed report including extensive background information on the proposal; the site's strategic location ("undoubtedly the most spectacular development in North America in terms of land utilization and consumer service . . ."); estimates of income and expenditure for both the hotel and commercial aspects of the site; and return on sale of condominiums.

"It's a fine, solid presentation," one realtor said in admiration.

B.C. Cools Olympic Hopes

Premier Barrett indicated today it is "most unlikely" his government will give financial support to bring the beleaguered 1976 winter Olympic games to British Columbia.

But the federal government, through Health Minister John Munro, said Ottawa is willing to stand by its original commitment of $10 million towards the games . . . if B.C. maintains its original position on financing.

And he added, if the province renews its "over-all commitment" on the original application, Ottawa may consider revising upwards its contribution.

Under the Social Credit government of two years ago, B.C. pledged up to $10 millions towards the estimated $21 million cost to bring the games here.

Barrett said the government definitely will not spend "a lot of money" just to have the Olympics held in B.C. He said estimated costs of a highway built between Vancouver and the Garibaldi site, according to Highways Minister Bob Strachan, would run to about $48 million.

"We're not going to spend that kind of money," Barrett said. "We can build an awful lot of chronic care hospitals with that kind of money."

Barrett told reporters he has received no official representations from anyone connected with the Vancouver bid to stage the winter games. And he said that even if representations had been received, it would be "most unlikely" that B.C. would contribute financially.

Later, Barrett's office released a form letter which is being sent out to any persons who have written the premier about possible B.C. participation in the games.

Barrett's letter reads: "Thank you for your recent letter concerning the possibility of British Columbia being the site of the 1976 Winter Olympics.

ONTARIO BOOSTS PUBLIC TRANSIT

TORONTO (CP) — A $1.3-billion plan to encourage public transit in Ontario cities and towns during the next decade was revealed today by Premier William Davis.

The plan, which applies to smaller communities as well as larger urban centres, would have the provincial government pay 75 per cent of costs of building new public transportation facilities to shift emphasis away from urban expressways.

Emphasizing "people first," the plan calls for transportation systems capable of carrying 10,000 to 20,000 passengers an hour.

"In these days of advancing technology, it would be folly to continue to rely solely on the present-day use of the automobile and our other existing systems of transportation," the premier said.

"We now have before us a unique opportunity to move forward from pollution and bumper-to-bumper traffic jams."

"With the multitude of demands on limited public funds, we must find less expensive ways to move people."

The premier told members of the Ontario legislature and municipal leaders gathered at the Science Centre to hear the policy statement that not only have expressways become prohibitively expensive within city boundaries, but so have subways.

"Our technical people tell us that subway construction costs have reached such a high level that few municipalities throughout the world can continue their construction," said Davis.

Fiery Death of a Film Stuntman

Dangerous Cold Pills Face Ban

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal food and drug directorate has taken the first step towards banning the sale of pain killers containing both phenacetin and salicylates (aspirin). Many headache and cold tablets would be affected.

In a trade letter to drug makers released today, the directorate announced proposed regulations to end the wholesale trade in such compounds by May 1. Retail outlets could continue to sell off their existing stocks after that date.

Use of combinations of phenacetin and aspirin has been blamed for kidney damage and other medical disorders. A recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal criticized use of the combination products and said doctors and the public should be made aware of the dangers.

One study reported in the journal said one in every 20 persons taking dialysis treatment for damaged kidneys is the victim of such combination drugs. Such products had to be taken in large numbers for a long time before harm is done.

In an interview today, P. A. Soucy, special assistant to the director of the drug directorate, said the proposed ban would affect "a good number of products" still on the market, including Excedrin. Two years ago, more than 300 over-the-counter products contained the combination.

Many manufacturers of popular brands of tablets that previously contained both phenacetin and aspirin had taken the step on their own already, he said.

For example, Frosst removed phenacetin from their headache tablets voluntarily about one year ago, he said. Anacin did the same even earlier when the first reports of dangers began.

Manufacturers have until Jan. 15 to make representation against the proposed changes.

Travel Ban Lifted

THURMONT, Md. (AP) — President Nixon lifted today a rigid government ban on travel of United States aircraft and ships to China. The action, announced by a spokesman at Nixon's Camp David, Md., retreat, is a first step toward eventual establishment of scheduled U.S. air and sea service to China.

Montrealer Axed

MONTREAL (CP) — Police have arrested a Vietnamese student in connection with the axe slaying of one man and the wounding of another Tuesday night. A man about 25 was found in the second-floor apartment with his head cut off. Another man was slashed in the arms and chest.

First B-52 Lost

Times News Services

SAIGON — A United States B-52 bomber was shot down today in the heaviest attack of the war on North Vietnam.

It was the first of the giant bombers shot down in the war. All six crew members were rescued.

U.S. command said it was not known whether the $8 million plane was hit by a surface-to-air missile or a missile fired from a MiG fighter plane.

Also lost in the heavy bombing raids were two smaller jets, including another of the swing-wing F-111s.

The F-111 was the fourth of the $15 million planes lost since the controversial all-weather attack bomber returned to combat on Sept. 28. The command said it disappeared before dawn Tuesday while on a solo mission just above the demilitarized zone.

The command also reported that a marine F-4 fighter-bomber was shot down in southern Laos Monday.

Fifteen B-52 missions were reported in North Vietnam below the 20th parallel during the 24-hour period ending at noon today; topping a pre-

U.K. Immigration Curbs Threaten Tory Split

LONDON (UPI) — A government plan to allow citizens of European Common Market nations free entry into Britain but restrict immigration from British Commonwealth nations threatened today to split the ruling Conservative party.

Political sources predicted that up to 35 Conservative members of Parliament would abstain or vote against the proposal when it comes up for debate tonight in the House of Commons.

Under the government plan, Common Market citizens would be allowed to enter Britan freely to work once the country becomes part of the market Jan. 1. At the same time, Commonwealth citizens would become subject to the same immigration restrictions now applied against aliens.

Conservative member of parliament Evelyn King called the policy "inhumane" toward Australians, Canadians, New Zealanders and other Commonwealth citizens.

"That they are now to be treated as inferior in status to Italians, Ugandan Asians or Germans and denied free access to Britain is not only foolish, it is a constitutional monstrosity because the British queen is their Queen, too," he said.

King, speaking at London University, said the Commonwealth citizens were relatives and that restricting their immigration hinted at an anti-British attitude.

"It is time British governments understood that their first duty is to be pro-British and to say that they are pro-British," he said.

Political sources predict the opposition within party ranks could erase the Conservatives 26-vote majority and cause the defeat of the proposal.

The government offered its plan under the Immigration Act of 1971 and a campaign promise to set up a single system of immigration control.

1,200 Years In Jail

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Richard Speck, who once said "the chair is a good way to straighten a fellow out," sat silently in the courtroom as the judge sentenced him to serve up to 1,200 years in prison for the 1966 murders of eight nurses on Chicago's South Side.

An execution order was put off pending a number of appeals. Then on June 29, the U.S. Supreme Court declared the death penalty unconstitutional in most cases and the Illinois Supreme Court ordered a hearing to determine a new sentence for Speck.

Tuesday, Judge Richard Fitzgerald of Cook County circuit court, said: "The only fair and just sentence in this case is one in which the defendant would be confined for life."
